City Council approves plan to make city more bike-friendly

By Christian Brown Staff Writer

DOWNEY - Noting the absence of Councilman Roger Brossmer, the Downey City Council on Tuesday unanimously approved a $4.5 million master bicycle plan, which will serve as a long-term blueprint for reduced traffic congestion and improved resident health through cycling.

The more than 400-page master plan includes dozens of projects that the educational offerings for many city officials agreed to tackle over the next five to 20 years, including adding students. purposeful bike routes on streets and constructing bike bridges

Councilman Fernando Vasquez praised the plan as a step forward for the city, but warned city officials not to drag their feet on implementing it.

"I don't want to wonk on this," Vasquez said. "This is not accident proof, but I'm not afraid of making big bold moves."

With his youngest son still in middle school, Councilman Sean Ashton expressed concerns with adding bike lanes to congested areas.

"I'm happy to support this, but I'm afraid of a kid getting hit and I know parents are concerned," he said. City Manager Gilbert Livas acknowledged that cities like Long Beach have had to alter their routes after installing them

"Not everything will be perfect, things can be modified," Livas said.

The city has obtained a nearly $2.3 million grant through the Los Angeles County Metropolitan Transportation Authority (Metro) that will go towards bike routes, cycling parking, and directional signage.

Thousands pack Downey Library for city's first ever "Mini- Comic Con" event

By Alex Dominguez Contributor

DOWNEY - Local children, families, super heroes, and geek culture enthusiasts alike flocked to the Downey City Library on Wednesday for its first ever "mini-Comic con event."

The event was held all throughout the library from 12-5 p.m., and included several vendors, crafts, workshops, face painting, story time, a game truck, and a food truck.

Many artists and animators were also on hand drawing sketches and selling some of their comics and art pieces.

The event was put together in an effort to provide local families with a smaller scale, free version of the yearly comic con event said Javier Gonzales, a children's library

"A lot of people don't get the chance to go to Comic Con since it's such a big program," said Gonzales.

"Apparently you have to be a member to get tickets, and it's pretty pricey. So we figured why not put on something a little smaller scaled for the community of Downey. That way they can enjoy it and it's a free program."

Comic Con International is one of several convention entities that put on many annual events throughout the year, including the Wondercon Convention in Anaheim and New York Comic Con.

Probably the most famous and difficult to get into, however, is San Diego Comic Con, where tickets are sold on a random queue system and often sell out within an hour of being put on sale. Often times, attendees will pay hundreds of dollars on tickets, lodging, and travel before even stepping onto the convention

Many of the vendors and artists who were at the event expressed their excitement to see "geek and nerd culture" be more accepted in today's society and to see more individuals exposed to the art form.

"I feel like comic books are commonly categorized as something that's silly, or for kids, or not having Batman, [and] Captain America," a lot of validity," said Glynnes Pruett, who owns Comic Book Hideout in Fullerton.

Rafael Navarro, a professional comic book artist and animator who participated in the event, likened the super heroes of today to the mythical heroes of ancient societies.

"The Romans had Hercules, and the Greeks had Heracles. You know, the gods and all those stories. "We have Antman, Superman, said Navarro. "Why we have these characters that are larger than life is I guess to bring us into a position where we aspire to greater things I

Three more men charged in 2002 kidnapmurder of Montebello girl

MONTEBELLO – Three men have been charged with the 2002 murder of a 15-year-old Montebello girl who was kidnapped on her way to school, the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office announced today.

Eddie Chavira, Daniel Cervantes, and George Barraza are charged along with co-defendant Rosemary Chavira, said Deputy District Attorneys Victor Avila and Eileen Kim, who are prosecuting the case.

The complaint alleges that on or between Oct. 7, 2002, and Oct. 18, 2002, Eddie Chavira was in custody for a shooting witnessed by victim Brenda Sierra's relative. Chavira told a fellow Lott gang member that he was going to have other Lott gang members take care of witnesses.

About the same time, he contacted his 15-year-old sister, Rosemary Chavira, to assist in getting other gang members to take care of witnesses.

On Oct. 18, 2002, 15-year-old Brenda Sierra was kidnapped on her way to Schurr High School in Montebello. She was raped and killed. Her body was discovered the next day in the San Bernardino Mountains. The cause of death was blunt force trauma to the head. The victim had no ties to gangs, prosecutors said.

Rosemary Chavira, Cervantes and Barraza are charged with one count each of murder, conspiracy to dissuade a witness and forcible rape with the special circumstances of felony murder during commission of a kidnapping and to further a street gang.

Eddie Chavira, currently in prison on an unrelated manslaughter conviction, is charged with one count each of murder and conspiracy to intimidate a witness.

Rosemary Chavira, who pleaded not guilty in March, returns to court on Aug. 4to set a date for her preliminary hearing. Because she was a minor at the time of the murder, she faces life in prison without the possibility of parole if convicted as charged. Eddie Chavira faces 25 years to life if convicted as charged.

More charges brought against suspects tied to South El Monte arson fire

SOUTH EL MONTE – Three more men are scheduled to be arraigned today in connection with an April 25 arson fire at a South El Monte tire shop that killed three people, the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office announced.

Mario Godina Jr., Estevan Manuel Castillo, and German Monreal are scheduled to be arraigned sometime after 1:30 p.m. at the El Monte Branch of the Los Angeles County Superior Court, Department 6.

Deputy District Attorney Sean Carney with the Arson and Explosives Unit of Target Crimes is prosecuting the case.

The three, along with co-defendant Robert Fuentes, 19, are charged in case KA109588 with throwing a Molotov cocktail into a tire shop at 1252 N. Santa Anita Ave. shortly before 5:30 a.m. on April 25 following a party.

The four are charged with the deaths of Rodrigo Gonzalez, 18; Destiny Monique Aguirre, 19; and Christopher Jimenez, 20.

In addition to three counts of capital murder, all four are charged with one count each of arson causing great bodily injury and use of an explosive

The complaint was amended on May 19 when felony arrest warrants were issued for Godina, Castillo and Monreal. The three were arrested in Mexico and returned to Los Angeles on Sunday.

The special circumstance of multiple murders makes all four defendants eligible for the death penalty. Prosecutors will decide later whether to seek death or life in prison without the possibility of parole.

All four are being held without bail.

The case remains under investigation by the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department.

It Takes a Village: PIH Health partners with communities to tackle childhood obesity

The national conversation around childhood obesity is getting louder, with numerous media stories every day about the health problems faced by overweight children: asthma, sleep apnea, joint pain, depression, anxiety and diabetes, to name a few.

But that isn't making conversations any easier for parents at their own dinner tables – if they are making it to the dinner table at all.

"Every parent wants to do what's best for their child, but there are so many challenges that it can be overwhelming," said Anita Sinha MD, a Pediatrician at PIH Health. "Life today is very hectic, and parents face a lot of demands, particularly in working households."

Dr. Sinha cites a myriad of factors that contribute to obesity:

a reliance on fast food

· a lack of awareness about nutrition less time and money for preparing healthy meals

a shift to digital forms of entertainment over more vigorous outdoor activities

The latter may also be driven by perceptions of safety; Dr. Sinha says that parents in some communities simply don't feel safe letting their kids play outside, which limits their ability to exercise.

These issues have affected some communities more significantly than others. Nationwide, an estimated 17 percent of kids between the ages of 2-19 are obese, according to body mass index (BMI) calculations, which measure body fat based on an individual's height and weight. A BMI greater than 30 is considered obese. In most areas of Los Angeles County, that rate is at least six points higher; in places like West Whittier/Los Nietos and Commerce, it is nearly double, according to data collected by the Los Angeles Department of Public Health in 2011. Childhood Obesity in America 2011-12

Overweight or Obese

For more than a decade, Virag Shah MD, director of PIH Health's Family Residency Program, has been working with the Los Nietos School District to address some of the challenges in that community, where nearly one-third of children are obese. It began with resident doctors from the program visiting schools on a regular basis to do BMI checks and conduct educational sessions for students, parents and teachers. Then, in 2011, with obesity rates continuing to rise and school district resources for physical and nutrition resources declining, the two organizations created a more formal partnership: the Healthy Los Nietos Collaborative.

Jonathan Vasquez, superintendent of Los Nietos School District, is a passionate advocate for the partnership.

"What motivated me to get involved was the realization that no matter how much we do to prepare kids for high school and college, they may not make it due to diseases caused by eating junk food and lack of exercise," Vasquez said. "Our kids cannot achieve all they need to and reach their full potential if their basic needs aren't met."

When the program first began, he said the focus was on "fixing" the obesity problem in the district, but he worried that that approach would detract from the academic progress that students had already made.

"Despite many of our families struggling financially – 100 percent of our students receive free breakfast and lunch – we focus on academic attainment and want our students to be perceived as making healthy strides while achieving excellence."

Instead, he worked with the collaborative to take the stigma out of obesity and refocus on implementing healthy changes. He hired a former chef to lead the lunch program and obtained grant funding to install salad bars at each of the district's four schools. Teacher leaders at each site meet regularly to coordinate health events and sponsor parent education sessions with facilitators from PIH Health.

The team also received a Safeway grant that funded water bottles and pedometers for every student, teacher and staff member in the district, and they've kicked off a "steps" challenge that encourages everyone to be more aware of their daily activities.

Although health department data is not yet available to determine the statistical effects of the Healthy Los Nietos effort, other anecdotal results are telling. During the 2012-13 school year, Safeway awarded PIH Health and Healthy Los Nietos a grant of more than $75,000 for healthy programs, and the collaborative team conducted 34 education sessions for students, teachers, and parents. As a result, 76 percent of district personnel agreed that Healthy Los Nietos influenced them to make healthier choices, and Vasquez sees the same outcomes for kids and their parents. Students were surveyed at the start and end of the school year (2013-2014) and asked to recall their health behaviors during the previous week. TV Time decreased by 40%, physical activity increased by 14% and junk food consumption decreased by 30%.

"This is a truly integrated partnership, and it has permeated the health of my district at all levels," he said. "At every educational session, we have a packed house of parents who want to learn, and we've moved beyond awareness to implementation. Things have taken root, and every year it has become stronger and stronger."

Vasquez says Los Nietos is now a model for other districts that want to improve health offerings, and PIH Health is working with additional community collaborates, like Healthy Downey and Activate Whittier.

For many families, the first step toward better health will start at their pediatrician's office. Dr. Sinha counsels her patients to choose one or two small changes, like eliminating flavored beverages like juice and diet soda so that they can develop an appreciation for plain water, or concentrating on eating more vegetables.

She also recommends that parents take action as soon as possible to ensure that their children don't develop severe health issues later in life.

"Because obesity leads to so many other conditions that can require medication and advanced care, like diabetes and heart disease, parents should take it as seriously as any other medical issue," she said.

A lesson in the art of complaining

By Raul Samaniego Contributor

NORWALK - How does one complain?

Better yet, why does one complain?

I used to think that reporting crime, no matter how insignificant it may seem to you, was to ensure someone had a record of it.

For instance, you might read about house break-ins and yard property thefts hidden in the back of community newspapers or perhaps on a law enforcement website.

I thought it was a waste of time until I saw my mountain bike go riding past me last year. (It wasn't alone, there was someone peddling it). Thus I've returned to reporting crime again.

When I called the sheriff station (not 911), the dispatcher asked for a police report number so they could send a deputy out.

Twenty four hours later, I had the requested police report in hand, but the $500 bike was never seen again.

While walking, rather limping, around the air conditioned halls of the Norwalk Senior Center last Friday, one of my five apreciados said "Hello," as I approached the information desk.

"I read your article on the Taxi Company," was all she said before adding a smile to her greeting.

We must have been overheard, for another senior center attendee was given some administrative added his unsolicited two cents by sharing, "I waited two and a half hours for a taxi before."

Quarks & galaxies, the cosmic milk that flows into trees Then darkness

What is the other - yes

It is Mexican too, yet it is formless, it is speckled with particles European pieces? To say colony or power is incorrect Better to think of Kant in his tiny room

Where the presidency is headed

Before the ins and outs of the 2016 presidential contest become a preoccupation for many of us, it seems a good time to step back and look at the office of the presidency for which so many candidates are vying. The presidency inherited by whoever wins next November will be substantially changed from the position his or her predecessors occupied a few decades ago.

The President is now the chief — and sometimes the sole — actor in American government. He far outweighs the other so-called "co-equal" branches. The media covers the White House extensively, and the other branches much less so. People don't expect Congress or the Supreme Court to solve the country's problems. Instead, they look to the President for initiatives, for remedies, and increasingly — and sadly — to serve as a de facto pastor to the nation when we confront a tragedy.

The branch that came first in our founders' minds, Congress, is now of secondary importance. This has been a long, slow development, the result not so much of court cases, legislation, or even deliberate planning, but of countless decisions by congressional leaders that have handed power to the President so as to avoid tough decisions on Capitol Hill. There may be limitations imposed by the courts or public opinion, but the system of checks and balances our system was supposed to operate under has been severely weakened.

Not even the press can hold the President to account any more, except under extraordinary circumstances. For one thing, it's very hard to grill the President these days. The tradition of regular presidential news conferences has all but disappeared — and when the press corps does get a chance to ask questions, the White House carefully manages the event.

This makes it very hard to find a forum or a place where people outside the White House bubble can ask the President probing questions and press for thorough explanations of a policy or problem. I've long favored a regular question-and-answer period in Congress that would be publicly televised — a chance for the President's supporters and opponents to probe his or her thinking. At a minimum, we should get regular and extensive press conferences. Instead, the only media-related event that happens regularly is the morning meeting among White House staff to figure out how to get the President on the evening news in the most favorable light. It's a form of manipulation that greatly reduces accountability.

Which is a shame not just for the obvious reasons, but also because the federal government cries out for more accountability these days. Whoever is President next, he or she would do well to pay more attention to effective management of the vast executive establishment than has been the practice until now. Otherwise, the breakdowns in the operation of government to which we've grown accustomed will continue.

That's because government today is strained at every level: The population is getting older, health care costs are high, our fiscal problems never end, challenges such as threats to our security, environmental degradation, and poverty abound. Highly complex problems pile up with great rapidity, and government needs highly skilled people to deal with them.

Every President comes into office insisting he'll spend a lot of time on making the government work better, but invariably he is distracted by the rush of events. The last serious effort to do so was Al Gore's, when he was Bill Clinton's vice president. Some progress might get made, but for the most part presidents don't deal with the issue in a sustained, comprehensive, coherent way.

This is not entirely the President's fault. The Congressional Research Service estimates that 1,200 to 1,400 positions are subject to confirmation by the Senate, and Presidents often have a hard time getting the people they want into position. That needs to change, perhaps by requiring an up-or-down vote on a nominee

To sum it up, while the President's accumulation of power is a serious problem in the big picture, it nonetheless is a fact. We ought to make it easier for him to get the people he needs in a position to make government work more

Getting down to business in Cuba

By Medea Benjaim

In case you missed it, the United States and Cuba now have diplomatic relations for the first time in 54 years. Unfortunately, the outdated economic embargo is smothering the tremendous potential this opening offers.

First, some background.

The embargo, put in place in the early 1960s to punish the revolutionary government, has held back the Cuban economy and poisoned U.S.-Cuban trading partner, taking some of the sting off the embargo. But after the USSR collapsed in 1991, Cuba plunged into a deep economic crisis.

Venezuela mostly replaced Russia as a reliable supplier of cheap oil years ago. Now Cubans fear that turmoil in the South American nation will knock out this Long-term economic distress has frayed Cuba's impressive education and health care systems. Its heavily subsidized food rations no longer meet basic needs. And the high prices unregulated markets charge are beyond the reach of the many Cubans who earn about $30 a month working for state-run enterprises and agencies.

A recent survey showed that nearly 80 percent of Cubans were dissatisfied with the country's economic system, and 70 percent were eager to start their own businesses. This was especially true among young people, who are highly educated and fed-up with the state-run economy.

Since his older brother Fidel handed him the reins in 2008, President Raúl Castro has tried to transform the island's lumbering, top-down system.

He's pushed through Cuba's biggest economic reforms in half a century. State companies have shed jobs, and national labor laws now accommodate more private enterprise. Today some 500,000 Cubans — almost one in ten workers are officially self-employed.

Cuba's government wants to open up the economy while preserving social gains and guarding against growing inequalities. It's concerned about an increasingly two-tier economy where people with access to tourist dollars or remittances from relatives abroad live in luxury, compared to those struggling on government salaries.

Racial inequalities are growing as well, partly because of the Cuban government's tolerance of paladares — privately operated bistros. As these restaurants are located in people's own homes, the arrangement favors the wealthier white Cubans who are more likely to have larger homes and relatives abroad who can provide start-up cash.

So Cuba sees a big need to expand its economy through foreign trade. And When Washington spurned Cuba, the Soviet Union became the island's top U.S. companies are raring to do business there, with American officials flocking to the island to plead their case.

> New York Governor Andrew Cuomo traveled to Havana recently with the heads of MasterCard, JetBlue, Pfizer, and Chobani. U.S. Chamber of Commerce President Tom Donahue took a delegation that included the CFO of Cargill and the chairman of Amway.

> Senator Debbie Stabenow, a Michigan Democrat, traveled to Cuba this year to tout her state's agricultural and lumber products. Atlanta Mayor Kasim Reed trekked there to push Coca-Cola and Delta airlines.

> And the list goes on, even though U.S. businesses can't offer Cuba credit or do business with government entities on this island nation just 90 miles away from Key West. They're mostly relegated to the sidelines, watching rivals from Spain to Russia to Mexico swoop in.

> Ending the embargo would be a win-win for Cubans and Americans. It would allow all of us to travel freely to the island, and it would let U.S. companies trade freely with one of our closest neighbors, creating more jobs in both nations.

> Now that the Cuban flag waves at the re-opened Cuban embassy in Washington, Congress should lift the antiquated legislation that stands in the way of true normalized relations.

City trees

Dear Editor:

I would like to know why it is the City of Downey has slated the trees, on the Griffith Middle School side, on Horley Avenue, for removal.

I am no tree expert, but those trees seem healthy and doing well. Other than possible sidewalk damage (raised in a few places), there seems to be nothing wrong with them. But my neighbor has a tree that has dropped 12" diameter, 20 foot long branches on my car, on their lawn (thankfully the bounce house and game trailer for their grandson's birthday wasn't there), and they do nothing about it. The tree was planted by the city. Is trimmed by the city. And as it is a danger to passing and parked cars, and children and adults walking down the street, I would think they would cut it down ASAP.

But then again, when the tree dropped a branch on my car and dented it, they came out, threw the branch in the chipper and told me they were not liable as it was an act of nature. Is that what they are going to tell the family and loved ones of the person that is hospitalized or killed when one of the branches snaps off from it's own weight, and crushes a pedestrian or car?

Just seems to me that for the amount of taxes the city charges, they can at least remove a hazard that they planted and maintain.

Pete Rose belongs in the Hall of Fame

By John Kiriakou

I love baseball. I have since I was a kid. And I'm lucky to be married to a woman who loves the game as much as I do.

We recently attended the 86th annual Major League All Star Game in Cincinnati. As part of the opening ceremonies, the Cincinnati Reds honored what they called the Franchise Four, the four greatest players in the team's history: Johnny Bench, Joe Morgan, Barry Larkin, and Pete Rose.

Bench, Morgan, and Larkin are members of professional baseball's Hall of Fame. Rose, on the other hand, is banned from baseball for life. Despite being one of the greatest hitters and toughest players in the game's history, he may never get this distinction. Why?

Because he gambled. Rose admitted in the late 1980s that he'd bet on baseball games, including his own. Even though he bet on his team to win, and never threw a game, this broke baseball's rules.

The 50,000 fans in Cincinnati went completely crazy when Rose's name was called. Hearing them chant "Hall of Fame! Hall of Fame!" as he walked out onto the field, I thought about second chances. I work in Washington, D.C. — the City of Second Chances. Just ask any politician caught cheating on his taxes, exposed for campaign finance fraud, or busted in an affair with an intern or underage page. They usually go before the voters, hat in hand, issue a mea culpa, and get on with their lives.

Most of the time charges are never even filed. That's true even in high-profile security cases.

Former Deputy Secretary of State Richard Armitage, for example, was never charged for leaking the name of CIA operative Valerie Plame, whose husband had written a critical commentary of the last Bush administration.

Scooter Libby, a former aide to Vice President Dick Cheney, was convicted of four felonies related to the case. But thanks to President George W. Bush commuting his sentence, Libby didn't serve a minute in prison. The same can't be said for the 3,278 Americans serving life sentences without parole for non-violent crimes that can be remarkably petty — including stealing a jacket or serving as the middleman in a $10 marijuana transaction. Don't they

What about the hundreds of thousands of people currently incarcerated as non-violent drug offenders? They make up half of all federal inmates. Shouldn't they get a second chance too?

A second chance for them might mean keeping their families intact, saving their jobs, and sustaining their contributions to their communities. It might mean allowing them to maintain a relationship with their children or keep employing people in their businesses. It would also save taxpayers a bundle instead of wasting money to lock up people who aren't dangerous.

Politicians always seem to get second chances. Just ask David Vitter, Donald Trump, and Mark Sanford about that.

And Pete Rose — who still autographs baseballs with "I'm sorry I bet on baseball" - sure seems to have gotten a second chance from the people of Cincinnati, if not from Major League Baseball.

It's time to extend average Americans the same courtesy. Just as Pete Rose belongs in the Hall of Fame, non-violent drug offenders belong at home with

A supreme threat to American democracy

Here's a little quiz you won't find on the LSATs: Which Supreme Court justice called a recent ruling by the court a "threat to American democracy"? And what decision was it?

A. Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg wrote it of the Citizens United decision, which armed corporations with the political free speech rights of human

B. Justice Sonia Sotomayor included this phrase in her dissent to the Shelby County v. Holder ruling, which gutted the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

C. Justice Elena Kagan said it while reflecting on the Bush v. Gore case, which shut down the counting of more than 100,000 ballots in Florida handing George W. Bush his first presidential win.

D. Justice Antonin Scalia penned these words when he objected to the recent Obergefell ruling, which struck down marriage discrimination against gay and lesbian Americans.

The answer is D.

I made up the rest, but they'd all be far more accurate than what Scalia said

It's hard to think about the state of American democracy without pondering the Supreme Court. As the least democratic branch of the federal government, it's always had outsized importance in shaping the opportunities for citizens to participate in our political institutions and social life.

At its best, the Supreme Court has upheld the principle of "one person-one vote," struck down whites-only party primaries, and invalidated educational apartheid. It did those important things when less enlightened views might have been more popular.

At its worst, the court has upheld poll taxes and literacy tests, okayed restrictive photo ID requirements for voting, knocked the teeth out of the Voting Rights Act, and intervened in the 2000 election to stop vote counting.

For better or worse, the Supreme Court defines the rules of engagement of American politics. So what's at stake in the 2016 presidential race?

A whole lot.

With several justices already over 80, the next president could nominate as many as four new members of the court. Will the new justices bolster the conservatives, who favor legislative power only when it violates minority rights, or the liberals, who have demonstrated a serious commitment both to voting rights and to the legislative process?

With the plutocratic Chief Justice John Roberts and Scalia leading the way, the conservatives pose as outraged populists regarding marriage equality. They pretend, ludicrously, that they don't believe in the court reviewing and invalidating popularly enacted laws.

What a joke. The same justices have no problem with nullifying laws that implement affirmative action, produce majority-minority legislative districts, or exclude corporations from spending money in political campaigns.

These so-called conservatives strike down almost any law that curtails the power of corporations. They just don't like the idea of equal protection and due process applying to people. Here's the principal question facing the court for the foreseeable future:

Who is the Constitution for? Is it for corporations, or the rest of us?

Right-wing forces want to scrap all limits on campaign spending and contributions. They want corporations to be treated as free speech actors in elections, but they don't want workers to have any free speech rights in the

They also embrace elaborate photo ID requirements, narrow registration laws, and endless barriers to voting for communities of color and young voters.

If a future Republican president replaces even a single liberal justice with a conservative, we could wind up with a democracy of the corporations, by the corporations, and for the corporations. Regardless of Justice Scalia's fantasies, this is the real threat to American democracy.

When children hurt, schools can help

By Olivia Alperstein

What happens when children witness violence? It's more common than you think, and the effects can be devastating.

More than 1 in 4 American children have been exposed to violence, according to a recently published study from the journal Pediatrics. Researchers found that these children endured significant psychological fallout — including depression, anger, and fear.

Many kids who experience trauma act out, and the ones most likely to be punished are students of color and students with disabilities. Traumatized children are more likely to be suspended from school, and are far more likely to drop out. Teens who drop out are more likely to later abuse drugs, fall out of the workforce, and end up homeless.

Instead of punishing these kids for something beyond their control, schools should support them and find ways to help them feel safer.

Take the case of Joshua Brown (not his real name), who'd been staying with his mother and siblings at a domestic violence shelter due to an abusive father.

After he changed schools, Joshua acted out and pushed his teachers' limits when he wasn't distant and withdrawn. Joshua didn't trust adults, and his grades reflected his shaky home situation.

People had given up on him before, so Joshua kept his struggle to himself. Most people just saw a troubled kid with anger management issues.

But the story didn't end there — his school had just completed training on trauma sensitivity. The staff recognized Joshua's behavior for what it really was and worked with him on trust and communication. Today this child thrives, and he loves learning.

Joshua wasn't alone in his silent struggle. It's hard to tell how many students experience trauma because many instances of abuse and trauma go unreported.

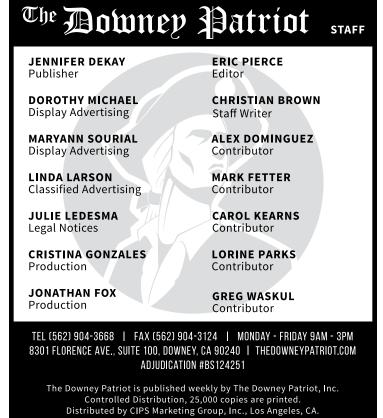

Some schools offer special programs for children of veterans or counseling for children who have witnessed violence. However, most don't integrate traumasensitive programming into their curricula. At least not yet. Five teachers and three students from the Compton, California school district have filed a class action lawsuit that aims to force Compton schools to better address the needs of all traumatized students. If successful, the lawsuit could pressure schools across the country to implement more sensitive policies. Schools have the power to reach students when it matters most. Educators can treat symptoms of trauma as an integral part of the learning process. Administrators can require staff trainings to recognize trauma and develop individualized plans for each student.

Above all, children in emotional distress deserve support from professionals trained to respond to their needs so they don't fall through the cracks. The Pediatrics study proves that child trauma is a nationwide health problem. No kid's dreams should be deferred because of a living nightmare.

Meet the local high school seniors choosen as Milken Scholars

HACIENDA HEIGHTS - The College Prep Scholarship. Milken Scholars, a joint initiative of the Milken Institute and the Milken Family Foundation, has selected 16 exceptional high school seniors as 2015 Milken Scholars. The Scholars were chosen based on academic performance, community service, leadership and their ability to persevere in the face of adversity.

"Tomorrow's leaders will need more than a keen intellect and a willingness to work hard if they are to successfully confront rapidly changing global challenges. They will need strength of mind and character," said Mike Milken, who cofounded the Milken Scholars program with his wife Lori in 1989.

Scholars receive a $10,000 scholarship, but what makes the program unique is the access to a lifetime of resources provided to scholarship recipients.

The new Scholars delivered inspirational remarks during the Milken Scholars Recognition Dinner held at the Ritz Carlton Hotel in Marina Del Rey on July 25, which was preceded by a Milken Scholars Summit in Los Angeles.

The 2015 Los Angeles Milken Scholars and the universities they will attend are:

Milla Anderson, City of Bell Dartmouth College

The city of Bell became a household name in 2010 after a scandal, which would directly influence the direction Milla Anderson would take in her

"Working in politics has been an ambition of mine since corrupted officials devastated my community," said Milla, the salutatorian at Bell High School, in Bell, California. Out of hundreds of applicants, she was chosen as one of 30 members of the 33rd Senate District Young Senators program designed by State Senator Ricardo Lara.

Now as an alumnus, she will be interning for Lara. She is an AP Scholar, a National Achievement Scholarship finalist and her awards include a National Merit Scholarship Commendation and a QuestBridge Milla was captain of the track team and the cross country team for her high school and she has run three marathons as part of Students Run Los Angeles. Her biracial identity, which she has always struggled with, has also helped shape her as a person.

"I realized I would never fit into society's cookie-cutter stereotypes or requirements and my identity would be my sole responsibility to define. I found a new freedom in accepting that I am multicultural the world of blood drives and other and multiracial."

She plans to major in government at Dartmouth College.

Richard Ballena, Palmdale Pomona College

Richard Ballena is an only child but, at home, it feels like he has 34 siblings. His parents run a home daycare and he often helps by coordinating field trips, managing the website, supervising and helping kids with homework.

"My life has been surrounded by children who face significant challenges and seek the feeling of security. They constantly remind me to appreciate the little things and to never settle for average."

Richard says he longs to make a difference in children's lives by demonstrating to them that their challenges should not prevent them from happiness.

At Highland High School in Palmdale, California, he was a QuestBridge Prep Scholar, won the National Physicians Award of Excellence and was Outstanding Member of the Year as part of the Key Club, where he was vice president.

Richard is founder and president of the Hero (Helping Everyone Reach Out) Club, a community service high school club that recruited 100 students and 300 members of the community to plan service events that included a prom for special education students, building a garden and singing at hospitals.

He also served as vice president and captain of The Golden Ratio, his high school "mathletes" team and was the varsity captain of the swim team. He interned at Children's Hospital Los Angeles and has done community service at Antelope Valley Hospital where he won the President's Service Award for performing 150 hours of service.

Michael Heights

University California, Berkeley

Driven by a curiosity for gaining knowledge in various fields, Michael Chang has had a versatile high school career.

As the founder and president of the American Red Cross Club at Los Altos High School in Hacienda Heights, California and as a former intern at Red Cross Headquarters, Michael has immersed himself in service events.

He is moved by blood donors and has worked at the Annual KLOS Blood Drive for two summers.

"Service is important to me because it taught me people are willing to help and I believe giving them the opportunity to can create incredible outcomes," he said.

He shadowed a pathologist for over 100 hours and has also volunteered at UCLA Medical Center in Santa Monica, California.

In addition, Michael was the design team leader at his school's Academy of Engineering, heading a team in creating electric vehicles.

"Michael's world is not selfcentered but focused on how he can impact those around him," said his school principal.

It should come as no surprise that Michael, the valedictorian at Los Altos, wants to become a cardiologist. He will study biology and computer science at UC Berkeley, as a Regents' and Chancellor's Scholar.

One of his goals at Berkeley is to explore how computer science can be utilized to improve the medical

"Michael stands alone among his peers for his capacity for absorbing, synthesizing applying knowledge," says his former English teacher.

Alyssa Chiang, Granada Hills UC San Diego

Alyssa Chiang has earned the Certificate of Merit Advanced Level in piano after playing for 12 years and gets good grades at Granada Hills Charter High School in Granada Hills, California, but at each step of the way, she questions how to do things that may not always align with her values.

"I pushed all the buttons and tested all the limits. I color outside the lines and write my own stories," says the independent young woman.

She has spent 13 years in the Girl Scouts and is working toward her Gold Award.

"She is the quintessential Girl Scout: intelligent, kindhearted, humble and open to learning," according to her college counselor.

Alyssa founded the Girl Power Club so young women could be more self-reflective, develop confidence and build their own bridges to success. She is heavily involved in robotics and helped Hacienda establish a robotics club at a local elementary school.

> Besides being a school valedictorian, her Awards include National Merit Scholarship, AP Scholar of Distinction and National Honor Society. She was president of the California Scholarship Federation and led service opportunities.

During the summer of her sophomore year, Alvssa attended the Honeywell Leadership Challenge Space Camp in Huntsville, Alabama, held at the U.S. Space & Rocket Center - an all-expense paid week. For four years, she volunteered at a local hospital and library.

She will major in biomedical engineering as a Jacobs Scholar at UC San Diego with the goal to become an engineer.

Eli Gramajo, East Los Angeles Princeton University

Eli Gramajo was nervous as he stood in line to buy a pack of Camel Light cigarettes at a local store in his East Los Angeles neighborhood.

It was his first experience a youth decoy for STAKE (Stop Tobacco Access to Kids Enforcement) and he was working with law enforcement to reduce the sale of tobacco to minors.

"Although I knew I could not save my entire community on my own, I wanted to be proactive."

At Downtown Magnet High School in LA, he founded the Chess Club, participated in the YMCA Youth and Government Club, and ran two marathons as part of Students Run Los Angeles. Since sophomore year, Eli has spent six hours every Saturday at Minds Matter Los Angeles, a program dedicated to inspiring low income students to reach their full

He served as mentor to underclassmen. He is the lead guitarist for his church music group, and is the substitute bass and guitar

He participated in Academic Decathlon and his awards include the National Honor Society, AP Scholar with Distinction, National Hispanic Scholar, Coca Cola Semifinalist and the California Scholarship Federation.

At Princeton University, he will study economics and philosophy.

Eli's parents were born in Guatemala and three older siblings are in college on scholarships.

"Mr. Gramajo is, without a question, an invaluable student whose potential for success in higher education is evident in all his work," said a former teacher.

"His work extends beyond what is required of him. He is a true leader, but acts as a mentor to many of his classmates who respect him and many times request his insight on discussions."

'Jesus Christ Superstar' extends stay in Long Beach

LONG BEACH - Due to capacity crowds, the final show of Long Beach Playhouse Mainstage season, Jesus Christ Superstar, will extend one additional weekend and will close on Saturday night, Aug. 22. Tickets can be purchased online at lbplayhouse.org or by calling the box office at 562-494-1014 X 1.

"We're thrilled when we have to add an extra weekend," said Andrew Vonderschmitt, the Playhouse's Executive and Producing Artistic Director. "It means a lot to us that the community comes out to support us."

The play tells the story of the final three days of Christ's life. In this interpretation Rice and Webber have taken Jesus off the stained glass window and thrust him into the street with the rest of us. These are not good or bad people, they are just people caught up in incredible circumstances, trying to do what they believe is right. It's a story about people, love, forgiveness and

This play is the first to be done with the Playhouse's new sound system. The voices of the singers and the music provided by the incredibly talented four-piece ensemble are crystal clear and can be heard equally well throughout the intimate theatre space.

"You'll never feel closer to the action than you do at the Playhouse." said Vonderschmitt.

A Mother's Unexpected Journey

After surviving World War II and the have to be isolated immediately, away pregnant with my third baby. I evacuation from Manchuria, Nobuyo Avery faced the biggest challenge of her life when she was pregnant with her third child and found out she had tuberculosis. Shared Stories is a weekly column featuring articles by participants in a writing class at the Norwalk Senior Center. Bonnie Mansell is the instructor for this free class offered through the Cerritos College Adult Education Program. Curated by Carol Kearns

By Nobuyo Avery

Carl and I were married in Tokyo on Dec. 5, 1959. Carl had orders to leave Japan before the end of the month, and we arrived in Hawaii before Christmas. I was leaving my family behind for a new life in the United States. By January we were in California.

When we got married, Carl and I agreed that I would be a stay-at-home mom. It sounded reasonable since a wife and mother's job seemed enough to keep me occupied. Observing my own mother, I knew that keeping up with the housework and raising children would be enough for me to Nine months after we were married our first son Cecil was born. I puzzled and wondered about his needs. No matter how much I fed him, he seemed to be hungry and cried a lot. He did not sleep well at night and my own rest was taken away.

I did not realize that having a baby was such time-consuming work. At age thirty, I was learning things that many mothers experienced in their early twenties. Looking back on my life up to then, I realized that I had never taken care of a newborn. A short babysitting job for a two-year-old did not teach much.

My mother and sisters were miles away in Japan, so I did not have anyone to share my doubts with or ask questions of. Telephone calls overseas were over $20 a minute in 1960, so I never called them.

At Cecil's first check-up I was told that his growth was substandard, that he had been underfed with inadequate mother's milk. The doctor told me to stop nursing and give bottles immediately. I felt so sorry for Cecil being hungry all the time and trying to tell me. I failed to understand him. Switching to the formula and bottles allowed me to rest more and he grew normally.

When my second child, Cliff, came eighteen months later, I could not imagine how I could handle two babies! Luckily Cecil was almost pottytrained. I notice that the new mothers in my daughter's generation use diapers until age three. All of my children were not using diapers after two years of age! But I still had to feed both babies and they needed constant attention.

I had lost a lot of blood when I gave birth to Cliff and I noticed that I tired easily. But I worked hard with household chores and caring for the two young ones. Dr. Siegel was different from the Navy physician. He did not tell me to stop nursing Cliff even though he was not gaining weight as was indicated on the standard chart. I nursed Cliff for almost a year and a half.

I was pregnant with my third child when doctors discovered that I had tuberculosis. They told me I would from my family and society. I had to recorded my weight on the calendar leave Carl and my two little boys, and my isolation turned out to be for eleven disease and all patients have to be isolated from the unaffected world until they recover. I understood this to concentrate to healing from TB. I well enough, but I spent many nights weeping over this.

I wondered how my little boys would react to the sudden disappearance of their mother. One Sunday, shortly after I was admitted, Carl brought them to visit and I saw them outside the window of my G Ward at Harbor General Hospital. They looked puzzled, sad, and their away from us?"

Carl's brother, who just got out of the US Navy, helped with taking care Garcia had two lung surgeries that of the children. He worked graveyard shift, and it was not easy taking care of the two boys when he needed to sleep more during the day. Carl's aunt and uncle helped, and so did his mother and father. His parents were living in born in September, six months after I Arkansas, and they came to California when summer vacation started in May.

The eleven months were such long time, but the hospital and nurses kept us busy with many tests, medications, meals, and treatments. TB patients were not allowed to exercise, and we rested and were wellfed in order to overcome the disease. We made our own beds, but were not allowed to participate in cleaning the place or doing any labor. On Sunday one of those buildings for the really we had worship services - one for sick like me. The other building was Catholic worshipers, and the other for all other denominations together.

and noted that I weighed 138 pounds just before Michael's birth.

Not being allowed to exercise was TB is a dreadful, communicable unpleasant, but my goal was to get well and leave the isolation ward. G Ward gave me lots of rest to allow my body had good food without having to cook or wash dishes, and no diaper washing and no housework. I cannot remember how we washed our laundry. I am sure that I did my own laundry but have no recollection of washing clothes. Except for worrying about my family, my life was dedicated to allowing my body to

There were four of us in the room. expressions said to me, "Why are you I and a woman from Poland were expecting mothers, and the two other ladies were Mexican women. Mrs. had not yet healed completely. Mrs. Contreras looked very healthy and young. She became bacteria-free in a short time and left.

> My third child, Michael, was entered the TB hospital. For his own health, I was not allowed to hold him. The nurses showed him to me from a distance. The other patients gave me and the other expecting mother a baby shower. It was fun and I was grateful for their concern, but it would be five more months before I could hold my

There were many buildings in G Ward. Two buildings were for women, for women who had no TB germs detected in their gastric juice, but were I weighed about 98 pounds when still waiting for their bodies to heal I was admitted and three months completely. Men were in the other two

Every Monday we had gastric juice testing. This test proves if we were a threat to society or not. It required them to insert tubes deep into the stomach through the nose and throat. The sample was tested in a lab to see if any bacteria were present. If the sample tested negative, the patient was sent to the G Ward B for a month or so.

After I gave birth to my son in the hospital, the doctors treated me with pneumo-therapy, inserting air into the cavity below the diaphragm to lift the chest to maintain its position as the pregnancy did. In July I had the lung surgery to remove the most infected part from my upper left lung. I was dismissed from the hospital a month later. I quickly reconnected with my

My greatest fear in those days was the recurrence of the disease. I never overdid housework, and I paid more attention to what I ate. I did not want to be separated from my family again.

We tried to plan our family, but I became pregnant again. Needless to say, I feared a recurrence of tuberculosis. With God's blessing, our fourth child, Elizabeth, was born in 1966, two years after Michael. I was able to stay healthy and had no more signs of tuberculosis. In my early years as a mother, I faced a challenge that I never expected. Not only did my family survive this experience, Carl and I now have nine wonderful grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren.
