City revokes hookah lounge's live entertainment permit

PUBLIC NUISANCE: Police have responded to the hookah lounge 18 times since November 2016.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY – A downtown hookah lounge will have to severely adjust its operation after the Downey Planning Commission last week made several changes to its conditional use permit.

Changes at Mosaik Hookah Lounge, located at 11029 Downey Ave., include the removal of live entertainment, the exclusion of customers under the age of 21, and the prohibition of loitering outside the business, with the exception of a queue along Downey Avenue for entry.

The Planning Commission also rolled back the hookah lounge's hours of operations. It now must close by midnight when it previously stayed open as late as 4 a.m.

According to the agenda item, representatives from police, fire, planning, and the city prosecutor's office met with Adnan Saab, owner of Mosaik Hookah Lounge, in September to discuss recent incidents that have happened at or as a result of the lounge.

Excessive police calls and building violations prompted the Planning Commission to alter Mosaik Hookah Lounge's conditional use permit. Photo by Alex Dominguez

Downey Police have been called to the hookah lounge 18 times since Nov. 13, 2016, for a variety of complaints, including arguments, yelling, fighting, theft, and drinking in public. Many of the incidents occurred after midnight.

The meeting with Adnan Saab included a new site inspection of the hookah lounge in which several violations of the business's conditional use permit were found,

Saab is a distant third cousin of including modified floor plans that had not been approved by the city, live entertainment during hours not permitted, dancing, and the lack of a security plan submitted to Downey Police.

> The fire department also found numerous fire and building code

> Some of these violations have already been addressed and the hookah lounge has until Jan. 4 to comply with the fire department's lists of corrections, officials said.

FOOTBALL: The defensive lineman from St. Pius X-St. Matthias Academy recorded 79 tackles this season.

DOWNEY – The St. Pius X-St. Matthias Academy football team finished their season with an overall record of 3-7 and an Academy League record of 0-3. The Warriors did not qualify for the C.I.F. Division 13 playoffs.

Leonard Payne, a 6'3 and 225defensive lineman, stood out on the field and dominated all nine games he played in for the Warriors this season.

on Payne. He recorded 79 total tackles, 57 of which were solo and 22 assisted. He averaged 8.8 tackles per game and had a total of eight sacks on the season. Payne forced six fumbles and recovered two of them.

For his efforts, Payne received head coach Jeff Tedford at Fresno State. Payne has only played one season for SPXSMA and has Division One talent.

In watching his highlights, Payne played as a man amongst boys. His game tapes consistently show him in the offensive backfield disrupting plays. Many of his tackles resulted in opposing players being tossed to the ground with little effort. Several tackles for losses are seen with opposing players getting up slowly due to Payne's brute strength.

One video clip showed a quarterback not even make an attempt to go after a bad snap because Payne was going after the ball too. Payne scored a touchdown on the play and the quarterback in question is seen running in a different direction.

Payne was also on the SPXSMA Here are some defensive stats basketball team where he averaged 3 points and 3.8 rebounds in four games. Payne is no longer playing basketball due to his commitment to Fresno State.

Downey's Rose Parade float enters home stretch

ROSE FLOAT: Downey's entry in Monday's Rose Parade will feature 14,000 roses.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY – With Jan. 1 quickly approaching at the start of next week, the Downey Rose Float Association has entered the home stretch of float preparation.

Los Amigos south campus, Rose elements that DRFA is known to be Float volunteers and community members are hard at work to put the finishing touches on next year's Rose Parade entry.

"Making a Difference' is the theme of the parade, and the theme of our float is 'Working Together,'" said Kelley Roberts, construction chairman at DRFA.

"Working Together" showcase two peace doves and an 11 foot 6-inch-tall, 11 foot 5-inchwide rotating globe. The float itself spans 42 1/2 feet-long, 18 feetwide, and 15 feet 2 inches tall.

The float will also feature Miss Downey Julie Ledesma and her royal court.

While this float is smaller in comparison to prior entries by Downey, it isn't necessarily a bad thing. DRFA Art Director Jeff Shadic, who presented the original concept for the float, says that the DRFA Redfox.

"wanted to relax a bit this year."

This float also leans away from Nestled within the Rancho more "cartoony" features, favoring

> "We excel at architectural elements," said Shadic. "We're playing to our strengths."

At the time of writing, Roberts says that the float is behind schedule and hopefully will be caught up within the next day and a half. Floral Director Jason Redfox isn't worried though.

"Most likely by [Thursday] afternoon we will be full-on decorating this float," said Redfox. "That being said, we feel that this float is going to decorate pretty quick. We're hoping that even though right now it looks like we're not done, a couple of days from now we're going to be in good shape."

That decorating process will include 14,000 roses and a "couple thousand orchids," according to

"I would say 80 percent of the flowers used on this float are roses," said Redfox. "To put it in perspective, last year with a larger float... we had about 7,000 roses. We're doubling the roses, but this year's float is 13 feet shorter and 10

feet not as tall."

Tying into the parade and float theme, the DRFA Relay for Life Team is selling $1 pink ribbons for every pink rose on the float. Part of those proceeds will be donated to Relay for Life.

Downey's float will roll down Colorado Boulevard and onto television screens when the 129th Tournament Roses Parade airs Monday at 8 a.m.

The float will return to Downey on Jan. 2 and remain on display in front of the Embassy Suites until Jan if the dirt on your hands is visible.

Paging Dr. Frischer...

By Dr. Alan Frischer

I recently addressed a class of 6th graders on the topics of germs and hygiene. As you can imagine, we spent much of the time discussing the importance of hand washing, which in turn led to the subjects of soap, water, and antibacterial cleaners. What's new in the scientific literature?

Hygiene plays a significant role in how frequently we get sick. The data is rather depressing regarding hand washing after using a public toilet.

Studies show that women are better at it than are men: roughly 62% of women wash after using the bathroom, while only 40% of men do. Even worse, only 5% of all people wash correctly. I'll get back to

A recent study out of the University of Maryland looked at hand sanitizers vs. soap and water. The hands of participants were deliberately exposed to E. coli. Then, one of the following was used for cleansing: alcohol-based hand sanitizer, non-alcohol based hand sanitizer, plain bar soap, or liquid antibacterial soap. Twenty seconds were counted out for each washing (note that most people spend five seconds with their hands underwater - if they wash at all).

The results? Alcohol-based hand sanitizers worked better than those without alcohol. Antibacterial soap worked only slightly better than regular soap. Washing with soap and water is the first choice, however, especially Sanitizers do not actually remove the dirt. However, hand sanitizers are indeed more effective than soap and water in eliminating germs.

The bottom line is that technique is actually more important than which product is used.

Just to make it more complex, however, note that the overuse of hand sanitizers and antibacterial soap is not a good thing, as not all germs are bad - many are protective. The overuse of antibacterial products can encourage bacterial resistance, making it more difficult to fight the harmful germs when we really need to.

To properly wash hands with soap and water:

- Wet the hands with running water (the temperature makes little difference), and add soap.
- Rub the hands together, making a soapy lather. Wash the fronts and backs of the hands, between the fingers, under the nails, and around the wrists *for at least 20 seconds (the "ABC" song, or two rounds of "Happy Birthday").
 - Rinse the hands well under running water.
 - Dry the hands thoroughly with a clean towel or air dryer.
 - Turn off the water with a clean paper towel or an elbow.

Soap and water are not always available or convenient. To properly use hand sanitizers:

- Apply the hand sanitizer to the palm of one hand
- Rub the hands together, spreading it over all surfaces of the hands and fingers until dry.

Always wash hands before preparing food or eating, treating wounds, dispensing medicine, caring for a sick person, inserting contact lenses, or touching your eyes, nose or mouth. Wash your hands after using the toilet, preparing food (particularly raw meats), changing a diaper, touching an animal, blowing your nose, coughing or sneezing into your hands, treating wounds or caring for the sick, handling garbage, household or garden chemicals, handling dirty towels, or shaking hands with others.

My talk to the 6th grade class was a good reminder to me and to the parents in attendance, as well as to my target audience. Germs are all around us. Some of the germs can cause illness. Please pay attention to your cleansing routine.

Until your hands are truly clean, keep them away from your eyes, nose and mouth...and from everyone else.

Help for struggling millionaires is on the way

By Chuck Collins

It isn't easy being a millionaire these days, especially if you've got less than $20 million. Fortunately, Congress is watching out for you.

Yes, the Republican tax cut bonanza targets lower end millionaires for special relief. Now those struggling to scrape by with $15 million or $20 million can breathe more easily. And even lowly billionaires will be able to keep more of their wealth.

Why? Because Congress just increased the amount of wealth exempted by the estate tax, our nation's only levy on inherited wealth.

In the bad old days, a family had to have $11 million in wealth before they were subject to the tax. This exempted the 99.8 percent of undisciplined taxpayers who, in the words of Iowa Senator Chuck Grassley, had squandered their wealth on "booze, women, and movies."

Now no family with less than $22 million will pay it (or individuals with less than $10.9 million). This gift to "grateful heirs" will cost $83 billion

Gutting the estate tax is a bad idea — it raises substantial revenue from those with the greatest capacity to pay. Even in a weakened state, it Age, a period of grotesque inequality. Champions of establishing a tax on inherited wealth included President Theodore Roosevelt and industrialist Andrew Carnegie, who viewed it as a brake on the concentration of wealth and power.

Modern Republicans, however, paint the tyrannical "death tax" as an unfair penalty on small businesses and family farmers. But that's a myth.

The most vocal champion of estate tax repeal is Rep. Kristi Noem, a South Dakota Republican who became the GOP poster child for farmers touched by the estate tax. House Speaker Paul Ryan appointed her on the tax conference committee to advocate for estate tax repeal because of her Noem says her family was subject to the tax after her father died in a farm accident in 1994, a story she repeats constantly.

The only problem, as journalists recently discovered, is that her family paid the tax only because of a fluke in South Dakota law that was changed in 1995. Her experience has little to do with the federal estate tax, which has been substantially scaled down in recent decades.

And while Noem was complaining about government taxes, the family ranch has collected over $3.7 million in taxpayer funded farm subsidies

Noem attacked the reporting as "fake news," even though it was based on legal documents she filed herself.

The reality is that the small number of estate tax beneficiaries aren't farmers at all. They're mostly wealthy city dwellers.

Still, the fact that the estate tax lives on creates an opportunity to make it better.

Lawmakers should institute a graduated rate structure, so that

Estate tax revenue could be dedicated to something that clearly expands opportunity for everyone else.

Bill Gates Sr. argues that the estate tax should fund "a GI bill for the next generation." In exchange for military and community service, young adults should be able to get substantial tuition assistance for higher education or vocational training, paid for by a progressive estate tax.

If Congress were concerned about the middle class, that's the kind of proposal that would become the law of the land.

Chuck Collins directs the Program on Inequality and the Common Good at the Institute for Policy Studies.He's the author of the recent facility. book "Born on Third Base."

We also need to invest in our fire stations.

Dear Editor:

The lot Station 3 is constructed on is not large enough to accommodate an apparatus "drive through" design. Station 3 should be relocated to a larger lot. Coincidentally, there are larger lots just south of the auto parts store on Paramount which are underutilized that would be ideal to construct a new state of the art fire station to replace the existing, obsolete

I recommend that the architect developing the fire station modernization plans be directed to include options for construction of new replacement facilities, in addition to upgrade of existing.

It may be more cost effective to demolish and build new facilities instead of upgrading existing.

Now that the voters have decided to continue to keep our fire services local rather than contracting with the County, let's invest Measure S funds in building the best facilities we can for the Downey Fire Department.

Tony Mendoza deserves due process

Dear Editor:

As someone who has lived and been civically engaged in Downey for a long time, I am particularly disturbed by the unfair treatment of State Sen. Tony Mendoza by some politicians in Sacramento.

Given the current climate of workplace environments, it's particularly critical that we afford anyone who has been accused of discretions the opportunity to present the facts via a thorough and complete investigation. Everyone is entitled to due process, and the ability present his/her side of the story, even an elected official.

The allegations against Senator Mendoza occurred years ago. However, none of the accusations involved any form of touching. In fact, none of the accusers have suggested any form of bodily contact.

At most he has been accused of making someone feel uncomfortable. That makes me very suspicious, but that aside, we should not be quick to judge without allowing both sides to be heard.

I am really interested in the truth to these allegations as are many of my neighbors. However, it would be wrong for us to rush to judgment or come to a conclusion without the benefit of the facts. To do so would be the ultimate wrong and speak ill of us as a society raised on the concept of truth and fairness (innocent until proven guilty).

Sen. Mendoza has always been there for our community and has always been a dedicated family man. I have always considered Senator Mendoza a man of honor and has represented our majority Democratic

The allegations against Roy Moore have never been proven and have all the appearance of a politically motivated attack. Lyndon Johnson was famous for accusing one of his opponents of having relations with barnyard animals. He gleefully said he wanted to hear his opponent deny the charge,

As proof, Gloria Allred showed an inscription in a yearbook, also allegedly doctored to show a relationship. In my yearbook, somebody drew a flying saucer. According to the fractured logic shown by Allred's allegation, that would mean there are aliens walking among us, or at least within orbit of the planet.

Finally, with regards to the point of the quotation I started with, at the time of Roy Moore's alleged molestations, he was a registered Democrat, active in party politics.

Supporters of the legislation have argued the opposite: that criminalizing the act of intentionally, deliberatively, and purposefully donating infected blood would increase the risk of the infection through donated blood. The primary concern about HIV-positive blood entering the donor system is the lag between when a person becomes infected and when the infection is detectable, which is what scientists refer to as the Proponents of the legislation also suggest that as of 2017, laws that criminalize infecting someone with HIV are not based on modern scientific data, as the Center for Disease Control and Prevention states that those persons who are treating the virus with medication decrease their chance of transmitting the virus by over 95%.

According to the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS), the U.S. has a concentrated HIV epidemic, primarily among men who have sex with men (MSM) and injection drug users, and it has greatly affected the economically disadvantaged in many urban areas. Equally impactful, the cost of HIV/AIDS medication can range from $2,000 to $5,000, which is especially challenging for poor to middle-income Californians.

Thus, the reason many argue that this legislation is inherently discriminatory is because if a person intentionally, purposely, and deliberatively infects a low- to middle-income person who cannot afford the cost of the medicine, the victim will effectively get a death sentence the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), the success in reducing the while the perpetrator of the crime only gets up to six months in jail without incidence of donated blood being infected with HIV is attributable in part required restitution.

Tips should go to workers, not their bosses

By Negin Owliaei

Thea Bryan is a single mother putting herself through graduate school. She spends her days at an unpaid internship for her social work program. At nights, she bartends for tips.

Sometimes, the pay is lucrative. But around October, her work — and money — started to lag. "When business is slow, as it has been for me lately, I don't get paid. The managers get paid, the kitchen staff gets paid, the dishwasher gets paid. I don't," Bryan said.

The Department of Labor could make things much worse for Bryan. Under a proposed new rule, she might have to hand her tips over to her bosses.

The new rule would let minimum wage employers take over the tips that customers leave for their servers. That's right: If you serve, your boss would get your tips.

Bryan shared her story at a press briefing put on by Restaurant Opportunities Centers (ROC) United on December 12. "Why is there such an effort to keep people from making decent wages?" Bryan asked. "First they don't want to pay an decent hourly wage if you get tips. Now they want to take your tips if you make a decent hourly wage!" The National Restaurant Association, also known as "the other NRA," frames the proposed rule as a way to allow for tip pooling, to end pay disparities between the front and back of the house.

But ROC United and other groups point out that there's no provision to ensure that tips stay in the hands of workers and not their bosses.

In fact, the language in proposal suggests that employers could allocate tips to make capital improvements or lower menu prices — or they could just pocket the tips themselves.

That transfer of money from workers up to their bosses is no small change. If the rule is enacted, the Economic Policy Institute says that employers would take $5.8 billion in tips from workers, an estimate they call conservative.

The restaurant industry is already rife with wage theft.

Employers of tipped workers are among the worst offenders in minimum wage violations, especially due to the sub-minimum tipped wage. Employers can pay tipped workers as little as $2.13 an hour as long as their tips bring them up to the full minimum wage.

But enforcement is lax. Bryan says she's gone two weeks without getting paid a minimum wage, and hasn't been able to get her employer to make up the difference.

Some employers already steal tips, as ROC United co-director Saru Jayaraman pointed out. ROC United has surveyed nearly 10,000 restaurant workers, Jayaraman said, and one in five reported that employers have taken a portion of their tips, even though that's currently not legal.

The Department of Labor is already feeling the pressure. Jayaraman said tens of thousands of people submitted comments against the rule in the first three days alone.

The battle over tips is only adding to Bryan's stress over wages. "My son is 11 years old," she said. "I would like to know how much money I will be making any given month so I can enroll him in after school activities and maybe take him to the movies every once in a while, or pay my rent."

That's why Bryan's not limiting her advocacy to the fight over owning tips. She says she'd like to see all people in the service industry get a livable minimum wage, just like any other worker would expect. "I'm a restaurant professional," she declared, "and I deserve a professional wage."

The weather is stripping down. Winter began on December 21. Strand hums a minimalist's song, the tune his bones play, of a lifetime of experiences. The poem's opening phrase is repeated three times, and on each time the speaker's meaning is altered. The tune is love. Poetry Matters is curated by Lorine Parks
