The city was also well represented, with Mayor Pro Tem Rick Rodriguez and former mayor Mario Guerra – who currently serves as a Civilian Aide to the Secretary of the Army - addressing students.

Rodriguez, a long outspoken supporter of the military in the community, said that he believed many of the students who attended the event had questions of "what if."

"What if I sign, what if I join and I don't like it? What if I don't like the discipline? What if I don't like the rank...what if I don't like it, how do I get out?" said Rodriguez. "I think you need to remind yourself that in the United States military, it's an allvolunteer military and we can go to war at any given time...I'm sure it's on their mind. But my youngest son said it the best, 'I'd rather live one day as a lion, than my whole life as a lamb.

"You have to reach down deep in your heart and find your passion, and those of us who really love this country will do whatever it takes to defend her. Sometimes defending her is just building a website for the army, or being a photographer, or being a dentist, or a paralegal. Sometimes it's really being the infantry and the artillery."

Guerra said that the military is a career and education choice, but it's not for everybody.

"We've got 340,000 soldiers that have post-secondary degrees in the last 10 years," said Guerra. "There's 150 different career opportunities in the United States Army; 99 percent of them are translatable/relatable to civilian life - from engineering, from construction, from aviation, from cyber technology – infantry is just one of them."

Guerra said that he hoped the career day would serve as a model for potential similar events to form within the region.

"My goal is to have 10 of these within other cities in LA County to have the same thing," said Guerra. "We have an all-volunteer army, so our job is to make sure we're not selling, we're marketing. Marketing is simple as letting them know what's available to them...the opportunities are immense."

OP-ED: Why I'm not running for state Senate

By Mario Guerra Former Mayor City of Downey

There are many among us who, as ordinary citizens, give of themselves in service for others in the community and to the benefit of all who live in our cities. These folks are Rotarians, members of the Lions Clubs, Kiwanis and volunteers at our schools and places of worship. They are there to serve proudly and to the best of their ability, often without recognition.

This desire to serve becomes much greater when the outcome of your work and efforts is apparent. Each manifestation of progress is a reward without compromise and your desire to serve becomes a devotion to helping others succeed.

Unfortunately for the residents of the 32nd State Senate and the 58th Assembly Districts represented by Tony Mendoza and Cristina Garcia, respectively, a devotion to serve seems limited by their own interests.

Mendoza resigned his seat, disgraced by the findings of an independent legal review of his sexual misconduct with staff, lobbyists and interns. He apologized for making them feel uncomfortable.

Garcia is on unpaid leave after allegedly groping staff, praising her own sexual exploits, and playing drinking games with staff.

It is said that no press is bad press so long as they spell your name right. I'd have to disagree. And I am certain this is one of the only things these elected officials and I could agree on - this is bad, really bad.

I have been blessed with an opportunity to serve a vital and often neglected portion of our society members of our Army, National Guard and Army Reserves. A CASA is the Army's link to the American people and I report directly to the Secretary Esper.

Hahn pushes plan to hospitalize homeless in Downey

DOWNEY - L.A. County is considering a proposal to house up to 165 homeless people in Downey while they recuperate from hospitalization.

Center, according to a proposal by Supervisor Janice Hahn.

An agenda for the L.A. County Board of Supervisors' March 13 meeting won't be released until Thursday or Friday.

"Options are limited for homeless individuals who are recuperating from hospitalization," Hahn wrote in the motion. "Typically, when a patient no longer needs acute care but is still recovering from an illness or injury, they are discharged home to rest and may receive follow-up care as an outpatient. Homeless individuals, however, end up staying in the hospital for a much longer period of time than necessary."

L.A. County has opened 432 recuperative beds as of December 2017, but the Department of Health Services estimates that approximately 10 homeless people a day are discharged from hospitals that could benefit from recuperative

"Creating more recuperative beds for our homeless individuals is crucial to ending the cycle of costly and repeated emergency room visits and prolonged inpatient days," Hahn wrote.

It's unclear where the homeless patients would go after they're discharged from Rancho.

Downey officials declined to comment on the record but said they were not consulted about Hahn's proposal.

Traveled down the road and back again: Downey's Golden Girls

► The three Sanford sisters and their mother reside in the same Downey house, where the family has lived since

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY From perspective of an outsider looking in, the home of Lola Sanford and her daughters wouldn't seem too out of the ordinary, but in actuality its walls echo with a deep family history.

The Sanford residency in Downey started in 1955 and built its way up from the ground; literally.

"We decided to move to Downey and bought a lot here," said Lola. "I drew up the floor plans...I kind of designed it."

The home was unique in that it was custom built, while most, if not all, the houses surrounding it were stock. It was here that the now 93-year-old and her husband, Thurman, raised their three daughters: Pat, Susan, and Barbara.

All three sisters - with only a handful of years between them recall fond memories of growing up in the house until each of them graduated from Downey High

"We were raised in this house," said 66-year-old Barbara. "We all were raised here and then moved away, went to college, and so forth."

The family remained in the home for 20 years, until oldest sister Pat and her husband bought the property in 1975, where they remained until 2016. Meanwhile, Sanford and her husband moved to Crestline where they lived together until his death in 1991.

"My husband and I, we were here for 42 years," said Pat. "Great house; a lot of great memories."

Though the residents have from her and moved mom in with us;

changed in some way or another four households moving into one." over the years, the North Downey home has consistently stayed within the family. It has been at the center of holiday gatherings, graduation celebrations, weddings, and even Every room in the house has a memory attached, ranging from family get-togethers to the names of now ex-boyfriends scribbled into cabinets.

"It's always been a gathering place for the families," said Lola.

When Pat and her husband decided to follow their dream of living in Hawaii, the house was then sold to Susan and Barbara. Around the same time, Lola decided it was time to sell her Crestline home.

Barbara, now a realtor, took care

"We had been wanting mom to move down and be closer with us," said Barbara. "I went up there and sold her place up there, they took off for Hawaii, we bought the house

If it sounds like something out of a television show, that's because it's not too far off. Now once again under the same familiar roof, Lola, Susan and Barbara jokingly refer to themselves as "The Golden Girls."

With grandchildren coming in and out of the home on various occasions, Barbara says that "the home still feels as if the house is still protecting us."

'Sometimes it feels like the past and the present just overlap." That's how life is though," generation here," said Barbara.

"We're now in our fourth added Pat. "It's not linear." And how does Lola feel about the legacy she designed so long

"I just feel very blessed that I'm here with my girls," said Lola.

In Memory of Janet Molinaro

April 18, 1934 - December 29, 2017

Long-time Downey resident Janet Molinaro passed away on December 29, 2017 at the age of

Born Janet Mae McCurdy on April 18, 1934, Jan, as she was known to family and friends, graduated from Downey High School in 1951 and later attended UCLA. While working for her family's company, McCurdy & Son, Inc., Jan would meet and fall in love with Southern California businessman Louis Molinaro. They were married in 1959 and later bought a home on Julius Avenue, where they raised their daughter Dina and son Richard.

Jan was a devoted wife, mother, grandmother, greatgrandmother, aunt and sister, and she will be remembered by her family and friends for her passion, humor and joy of life. Jan developed a love for sports while playing golf and tennis in her youth and she passed this love down to her children and grandchildren. She was a dedicated fan of UCLA athletics and all who knew her would agree that she was truly a "Bruin for life."

A fixture in the Downey business community, Jan entered the real estate industry in 1976 as an agent and later became a broker for Century 21 CB Real Estate, which she owned until her retirement in 2013. She was an active member of the Downey Association of Realtors, which honored her as Broker of the Year as recently as 2011, and a volunteer for the National Kidney Foundation.

Why Christians support Israel

By Dennis Prager

In speeches to fellow Jews around America, I often point out that many American Jews are experiencing cognitive dissonance. The institution Jews most admire — the university — turns out to be the most significant source of Israel hatred in America and the rest of the West. At the same time, the people many Jews most distrust — Christians (especially evangelical and other conservative Christians) — turn out to be the Jews' and Israel's best friends

Given that these two facts are undeniable, how do many American Jews deal with this dissonance? They largely ignore the Israel hatred on campuses, and they dismiss the authenticity of the Christian support. They dismiss it by denying it is genuine. Christians who support Israel, they (and non-Jews on the left) argue, do so for two deceptive reasons.

One is they seek to convert Jews.

That Christians seek to convert non-Christians is, of course, true. The primary aim of Christianity, after all, is to spread belief in Christ. But why would anyone think supporting Israel will convert Jews? Does anyone think that Christians who support Israel's enemies are making Muslims convert to Christianity? The fact is there isn't a shred of evidence that Jews have converted to Christianity, because of Christian support for Israel. Indeed, the Jews who most support Israel are either the most religious or the most strongly identifying secular Jews. Neither is a candidate for conversion.

Another way Christian support for Israel is belittled is by claiming that Christians support Israel in order to hasten the Second Coming of Jesus. But pastor John Hagee, head of Christians United for Israel, the largest pro-Israel organization in America, has said countless times nothing a Christian can do will hasten the return of Jesus; only God will decide when that happens — and in His own good time.

Moreover, even if this were the reason Christians support the Jews and Israel, why would it disturb Jews? It would mean that Christians would support them until Jesus returns. What's wrong with that?

Having spoken at numerous churches' "Night to Honor Israel" events, I know how genuine this support is. But last week in Nashville, I witnessed a particularly convincing example of the sincerity of this support. I spoke before thousands of Christians at the National Religious Broadcasters Convention when they gathered one evening solely to express their support for Israel. Maybe five Jews were present. Isn't thousands of Christians devoting an entire evening to express support for Israel — with essentially no Jews in attendance to witness it — about as convincing a proof of the authenticity of this support as one could imagine?

So, why do Christians support Israel? They believe in supporting American allies and supporting countries that share their moral values. And, unlike the left, they have moral problems with Islamism, not with Zinnism

But the primary reason virtually every Israel-supporting Christian gives is the biblical verse from Genesis in which God says to Abraham, "I will bless those who bless you and curse those who curse you." These Christians believe (as does this Jew) God blesses those who treat the Jews decently and curse those who seek to harm the Jews.

You don't have to be a believer in the God of Abraham or the Bible to accept this proposition. All the Jews' ancient enemies disappeared from history. And look at what happened to Spain after it expelled its Jews in 1492. One of the greatest powers of the world became largely irrelevant to history within a couple of generations. As for Germans, the perpetrators of the Holocaust, they endured a staggering amount of death and suffering as a result of their support for the greatest Jew hater in history; and their country was divided in half for the next half-century. Likewise, the countries today that most curse the Jews — Arab and other Muslim countries — are among the most benighted countries in the world. If they were to devote to building their countries the money and energy they devote to attempting to destroy Israel, they would be in far better condition morally, socially, economically and politically.

Meanwhile, the country that has most blessed Israel and the Jews is America. No country in the modern period has treated its Jews as well as America has, and no country has stood by Israel as much as America has. And America has been almost uniquely blessed.

These American Christians know something that the secular and leftwing elites do not: The day America abandons Israel will be the beginning of the end of America as we know it.

These people are not fools.

Their detractors are.

Why my son is no longer a Republican

By Susan Estrich

It was Donald Trump's position on guns that did it. To be more specific, it was President Trump's proposal to address violence in schools by arming schoolteachers that finally made a Democrat of my son. Until then, he'd been holding out hope for the Republican Party. But when the president decided that my son's girlfriend — a student teacher dedicated to teaching science to inner-city public school students — should earn a bonus for carrying a deadly weapon, my son decided he'd had it.

When John McCain was running for president, my son managed to convince me to buy a stand-up cardboard cutout of McCain. Never mind the fact that both his parents are lifelong Democrats, that we met when his dad was working for Fritz Mondale and I was working for Geraldine Ferraro, that half the Democrats running for president, and the people running their campaigns, attended our wedding and sent presents when our children were born. My daughter has been a Democrat since, well — since forever. Her latest project, called Project 100, is an effort she began with friends to elect 100 progressive women to Congress by 2020, the 100th anniversary of women's suffrage.

Meanwhile, my son organized the Young Republicans club, and I paid for the pizza.

The important thing, I've always taught my students, and later my children, is to be involved in politics — not to agree with me.

On election night, my son and I settled in front of the television a few minutes before 8 p.m. Eastern time. "We'll know as soon as the polls close in the East," I told my son.

"Trump is going to win," my son told me. I've been doing politics for more years than I care to count. But my son is a numbers guy; his day job is running a quantitative hedge fund he founded with a college classmate. And he and his partner had been running the numbers and looking at the analytics

"You can't be right," I told him. "All my famous pollster friends are telling me Hillary has it." So much for me and my famous friends.

But predicting Trump's election is a far cry from supporting President Trump. In fairness to my son, it wasn't Trump's conservatism that appealed to him. My son, like a fair number of the president's supporters, is basically a libertarian: Live and let live, and lower taxes would be nice, as well. He's socially liberal and fiscally conservative; at least Trump was one for two.

Until the shooting started.

The president fancies himself a supporter of the Second Amendment. But nothing in the Second Amendment protects the right to bear assault weapons; or the right to buy a gun without a full and thorough background check; or the right to own a gun without proof that you know how to use it safely (like what we require for driving an automobile). And absolutely nothing in the Second Amendment provides for schools to be shooting ranges — or for teachers to be ready not to teach their students but to open fire.

So my son didn't just change his mind. He did something about it. With the help of an anonymous Mexican artist, he and his partners created "The Donald Deck." It's a real deck of playing cards, with one key difference from a normal deck: Donald Trump is on every card. Donald Trump as a cowardly lion; Donald Trump as a Tyrannosaurus rex (with very small hands); Donald Trump as a hippo; and their favorite, Donald Trump as a crying baby. You can check it out at http://thedonalddeck.com/ks. It's a perfect present, a good laugh and a much better idea than arming schoolteachers, any day.

Choose the lamb

Dear Editor:

There are some people that are dedicated to the symbol of the donkey.

They believe in gun control, in abortion, with a woman's right to choose, and in open borders, where good people can come into our country, even though drugs and terrorists can also come in.

Then there are some dedicated to the symbol of the elephant. They believe in the 2nd Amendment, that everyone has a right to have a gun to protect themselves, that abortion is murder, that we should have a wall at the border and that only those that are legal can come in.

But there is another symbol that is a lamb. Those are the people that believe that Jesus is called the Lamb of God, and that he came to save us from our sins. Their symbol is the Ten Commandments. If you live that, when you die, you will go to heaven. Pretty simple.

I choose the lamb.

If your dog poops, you must scoop

Dear Editor:

As I wander down Downey Avenue with my pup (and by pup I mean well-trained 9-year-old lab), I can't help but notice the clumps and piles of dog poop scattered throughout the yards and sidewalks.

It has become very clear that we live amongst the not-so-rare and sadly all too common non-scooper human. And, even more sad, it has become worse over the last few months, suggesting that a new non-scooper has moved into this neighborhood. Even worse, they are elusive. My husband and I walk our pup at least three times per day and we have yet to catch a peek of the phantom poop offender.

So, it has come to me to write to our neighbors through the local paper in the hopes we can reach a friendly agreement, that being: if they poop, you must scoop.

Your dog is your responsibility and your dog's poop is part of that responsibility. Dog owners are required to clean up after their dogs when taking them out in public. Don't forget the poop bags when you leave your house for a walk.

If it is because you cannot afford the additional expense of doggy bags, the Dollar Tree sells multiple rolls for $1. We have also used diaper disposal bags, again, found at the Dollar Tree (70 for $1). Cheap sandwich bags, vegetable/fruit bags from the grocery store, newspaper (not this one, of course), seran wrap, tin foil, paper towels...something, anything, just pick it up.

If it is because you just don't care, please move to another city of find a new home for your pup. It is not ok, it is not sanitary, it is not respectful of your neighbors. Please don't be that person, I beg of you to take a second and scoop the poop.

Gratitude to Janice Hahn

Dear Edito

I would like to express my gratitude to Janice Hahn and her fellow Board of Supervisors for taking the initiative to support a new county-wide program to provide tracking bracelets for people with Alzheimer's and autism (as reported in the Patriot on 3/1/18).

There are over 5 million Americans aged 65 and older with Alzheimer's and that number is projected to double by 2040.

It is always gratifying when our elected officials respond to critical needs in the community.

Choose life

Dear Editor:

Lodged between the popular Chick-fil-A, The Habit and the soon-tobe-opened La Barca restaurant is a building that houses the blight of our city.

Students from Downey High School can pop in to this building to get condoms and birth control without parents having any knowledge of this. And when those condoms and birth control fail to "protect them," girls can return for an abortion, without parental knowledge or permission.

No pain, no problem, a quick fix. No so. Just ask many of the women who regret having an abortion for the rest of their lives. They were told it was just a blob of tissue, or they were told it would be the best thing for their future. They were told that their boyfriend or family would abandon them. They were told all would be fine if they just ended this inconvenient little life. We pray for all those who were duped.

FPA Women's Health may perform other services for women but the dirty truth is their biggest income comes from ending the lives of unborn babies. Abortion is not healthcare.

We wonder why our society has so much violence? It starts here, in Downey, which allows an abortion chamber to be next to a high school.

So my plea to our city planners, council members, businesses, parents and churches: Pray first and do what you can so that God's grace can flow here. Where are the people of God? Why are we not saving the micohumans? Thousands of couples are waiting to adopt a child.

City of Downey, let's send a message that we prefer to choose life.

Protect the 2nd Amendment

Dear Edito

I wish to enter the debate on gun control in which the Patriot seems only interested in printing one side.

I am both an American and NRA member. Do I agree with everything this country's government does? Absolutely not, but that doesn't mean I'm leaving. It's still the best country there is. By the same token, do I agree with everything the NRA says and does? Absolutely not, but currently it's the best organization to defend our 2nd Amendment rights.

People say we should ban all assault rifles. Maybe we should but I challenge anyone to give me a definition or describe exactly what an assault rifle is. The 1994 "assault weapons" ban described an assault weapon as one capable of accepting a detachable magazine along with some other cosmetic features. I have hunting rifles with detachable magazines and I guarantee you they would never be considered an assault weapon. This is probably why the "ban" is no longer in effect as no one can definitively describe an assault weapon.

What about "red flag laws" whereby someone can accuse someone of being insane or incapable of owning a firearm? This reminds me of McCarthyism where everyone was being accused of being a Communist. That worked really well, didn't it?

Now, how about raising the legal age to buy or own a firearm to 21. The arguments I have heard in favor of this are that the human brain isn't fully developed and fully capable of rational thinking until 25 (this position is ludicrous), or someone under the age of 21 is incapable of making sound decisions, therefore should not have a gun. All stupid reasons.

If we use this logic, then why do we allow an 18-year-old to vote or a 16-year-old to drive? Or someone to enter the military to fight and die for this country at age 18? Why do we try people as adults for crimes they committed as juveniles?

I am in favor of comprehensive and thorough background checks with thorough training and education prior to purchasing a firearm, possibly even in our schools. I am also in favor of a reasonable waiting period after purchasing a firearm; California's 15 days is ridiculous. I also think parents should be held responsible for their children's actions.

I could go on but in consideration of time and space I will stop for

Marjorie Swenson Downey

Dear Editor:

In order to stop school shootings, we must analyze each case to find out the reason for the killings. From what I have been reading, the shootings have been done primarily by emotionally unstable young men.

We must get answers as to why they are/were so obsessed by hate towards their peers and people in authority. Is the problem a breakdown in the family? Or is it due to drugs? Bullying? Break-up of a relationship? Racism?

Years ago, the family unit was more cohesive. Many went to church as a family where we were taught to love God and others. When we children misbehaved, our dad would scold us and get the switch out. He never beat us but he taught us to obey him and our mother. Obeying authority, of course, was extended to our school teachers who on the most part were honorable in their profession.

I loved coming home after school to a welcoming, loving mother while dad was working on the state highways, laying new roads in the summer and shoveling salt and ashes from the back of a truck. He had to be on-call night and day to help keep the roads clear.

Unfortunately, today, in order to keep up with the cost of living and owning a home, two parents are working, and I'm wondering if the lack of parental presence and attention has anything to do with the mental breakdown of these young people. Additionally, I feel that watching violent movies and videos might be a factor.

From what I understand, we have plenty of laws on the books for background checks and sale of assault weapons. These laws, of course, must be enforced. I have read that in Israel, teachers and other school officials carry guns. I have never heard of a school shooting by a student in Israel.

Instead of waving banners or exclaiming that our school is a "gunfree zone," the banners should read "We carry guns. This is not a gunfree zone." In several instances that I have read about, a person with authorization to carry a gun used his gun to prevent further mass killings.

Guns do not kill. Irresponsible people with guns kill.

Paging Dr. Frischer...

By Dr. Alan Frischer

I find it absolutely fascinating that scientists are working on creating meat in the laboratory. The concept has enormous potential - to reduce environmental costs, to contribute to a more healthful diet, to protect animal welfare, and even to ease world hunger.

Population growth and changing diets have led to a doubling of meat consumption over the past 50 years. Producing meat is costly - to us, and to our planet. Meat and dairy products account for 70% of global water consumption, 38% of land use, and perhaps 18% of the world's greenhouse gas emissions. Currently, food-producing animals may be fed antibiotics and growth-promoting hormones, which, of course, we then consume. Their impact on our health is still not fully understood.

Imagine a backyard barbecue where the burgers and chicken were grown in your own kitchen, using a single stem cell from an animal's from that animal, and it's not genetically modified. We're a long way from creating affordable meat, and from doing it outside of a lab; nonetheless, raising animals for consumption may become a thing of the past. Meat is essentially muscle tissue. Due to modern stem cell research and tissue engineering, scientists can already grow tissue in the lab. When it grows from a few cells into a chunk, it becomes a piece of meat, and is referred to as lab grown, clean, or cultured meat. There are a number of companies hard at work in this field. But can the cost of lab-grown meat match or beat that of currently available meat products?

The Dutch company Mosameat has grown such beef in the lab since 2012. Stem cells were extracted from cow muscle tissue. Over a few weeks, the cells multiplied and formed thin strips of muscle. It took about 10,000 of these strips to make one patty, which cost about $300,000! Since that first burger, the company has reduced the cost of this burger to $30 per · Over the last two years, a Silicon-Valley startup, Memphis Meats, has produced meat, chicken, and duck from animal cells. Unsurprisingly, the costs ran into the thousands of dollars per pound.

Recently, the largest United States meat company, Tyson Foods, launched a venture-capital fund to invest in start-ups working on lab muscle tissue. Chemically, it would be the same as the meat that comes grown meats.

Whether lab grown or not, do we really want to consume more meat? The World Health Organization has published a report that classified red meats as "probably carcinogenic to humans" and processed meats as "carcinogenic to humans." Scientists haven't yet determined just which elements of conventional meat are responsible for the potential carcinogenic effects.

There have, of course, long been meat alternatives readily available. Vegetarian and vegan meat substitutes made from plants are in our grocery aisles. Insect consumption is common in many areas of the world, and provides a great source of protein.

Are you interested in trying lab-grown meat? Perhaps this will be our future. At this time, cultured meat is still in the research and development phase and has considerable cost, technological, and regulatory hurdles to

Opioid overdoses increased 30% last year, ER data shows

▶ Opioid overdoses increased for men states hit hard by the epidemic. The Notification of Community-based percent) and women (24 percent) members in affected areas, as programs (PDMPs) to inform clinical and women, across all age groups, states and demographics.

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Data from emergency departments (EDs) show that the U.S. opioid overdose epidemic continues to worsen, according to the latest Vital Signs report by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

The report examines the timeliest data available to CDC on ED visits for opioid overdoses across multiple states.

Overall, ED visits (reported by 52 jurisdictions in 45 states) for suspected opioid overdoses increased 30 percent in the U.S., from July 2016 through September 2017. Opioid overdoses increased for men and women, all age groups, and all regions, but varied by state, with rural/urban differences.

The findings highlight the need for enhanced prevention and treatment efforts in EDs and for greater access to evidence-based opioid use disorder treatments, including medication-assisted treatment and harm reduction

"Long before we receive data from death certificates, emergency department data can point to alarming increases in opioid overdoses," said CDC Acting Director Anne Schuchat, M.D. "This fast-moving epidemic affects both men and women, and people of every age. It does not respect state or county lines and is still increasing in every region in the United States."

ED data allow faster tracking of regional and state trends

Data from 16 states in CDC's Enhanced State Opioid Overdose Surveillance (ESOOS) Program were analyzed, showing quarterly trends by state and rural/urban differences from July 2016 through the National Syndromic Surveillance September 2017. Overall, ED visits for suspected opioid overdoses data show:

- ► Eight states from three U.S. regions reporting substantial increases—25 percent or greater in the rate of opioid overdose ED
- ► Significant increases in all states reporting in the Midwest, including Wisconsin (109 percent), Illinois (66 percent), Indiana (35 percent), Ohio (28 percent), and Missouri (21 percent).
- Considerable variation among states in the Northeast and Southeast; some states reported substantial increases and others modest decreases:
- ▶ In the Northeast, large increases were seen in Delaware (105 percent), Pennsylvania (81 percent), and Maine (34 percent), but other states, like Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island showed nonsignificant decreases (<10 percent).
- ▶ In the Southeast, North Carolina reported an increase (31 percent), while Kentucky reported a statistically significant decrease (15 percent).
- ► Continued rises in cities and towns of all types. Highest rate increases (54 percent) were in large central metropolitan areas (a population of 1 million or more and covering a principal city).

The sharp increases and variation across states and counties regulate the world. We have that indicate the need for better intuition, but there hasn't been a lot coordination to address overdose of science behind it," says Martin, outbreaks spreading across county and state borders. Closer coordination between public health and public safety agencies can support identification of changes in supply and use of illicit opioids, further allowing communities to take appropriate action to reduce opioid overdoses.

CDC also examined data from Program (NSSP) BioSense platform, ESSENCE using (Electronic increased 35 percent in these 16 Surveillance System for the Early Epidemics) software. Analysis of data from 52 jurisdictions in 45 states, which covers over 60 percent of ED visits in the U.S., found that from July 2016 through September

- All five U.S. regions experienced rate increases; the largest was in the Midwest (70 percent), followed by the West (40 percent), Northeast (21 percent), Southwest (20 percent), and Southeast (14 percent).
- ► Every demographic group rate experienced substantial increases, including men and people ages 25-34 (31 percent), 35-54 (36 percent), and 55 or older (32 percent).

The report noted the central role of state and local health departments in coordinating responses to opioid overdoses. Health departments can:

- ► Alert communities to rapid increases in overdoses seen in EDs and coordinate an informed and timely response.
- Increase naloxone policies permit.

► Increase availability of and access to treatment services, including mental health services and medication-assisted treatment for opioid use disorder.

► Support programs that reduce harms which can occur when injecting opioids, including those that offer screening for HIV and hepatitis B and C, in combination with referral to treatment.

► Support the use of the CDC distribution (an overdose-reversing Guideline for Prescribing Opioids and friends, and other community using prescription drug monitoring practice.

"Research shows that people who have had an overdose are more likely to have another. Emergency department education and post-overdose protocols, including providing naloxone and linking people to treatment, are critical needs," said Alana Vivolo-Kantor, Ph.D., behavioral scientist in CDC's National Center for Injury Prevention and Control. "Data on opioid overdoses treated in emergency departments can inform timely, strategic, and coordinated drug) to first responders, family for Chronic Pain, which encourages response efforts in the community

Research reveals physical impact of a smile

Not all smiles are expressions of warmth and joy. Sometimes they can be downright mean. And our bodies react differently depending on the message a smile is meant to send.

Research led by Jared Martin, a psychology graduate student at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, shows that smiles meant to convey dominance are associated with a physical reaction -- a spike in stress hormones -- in their targets. On the other hand, smiles intended as a reward, to reinforce behavior, appear to physically buffer recipients against stress.

"Facial expressions really do whose study was published last week by the journal Scientific Reports "Our results show that subtle differences in the way you make facial expressions while someone is talking to you can fundamentally change their experience, their body, and the way they feel like you're evaluating them."

Martin works in the lab of UW-Madison psychology professor -- and co-author on the study --Paula Niedenthal, whose research on emotions has established three major types of smiles: dominance to that as approval, and it kept them (meant to convey status), affiliation (which communicates a bond and shows you're not a threat), and reward (the sort of beaming, toothy smile you'd give someone to let them know they're making you

The researchers stressed out 90 male college students by giving them a series of short, impromptu speaking assignments judged over a webcam by a fellow student who was actually in on the study. Throughout their speeches, the participants saw brief video clips they believed were their judge's reactions.

In fact, each video was a prerecorded version of a single type of smile -- reward, affiliation or dominance.

Meanwhile, the researchers were monitoring the speakers' heart rates and periodically taking saliva samples to measure cortisol, a hormone associated with stress.

"If they received dominance smiles, which they would interpret as negative and critical, they felt more stress, and their cortisol went up and stayed up longer after their speech," says Niedenthal. "If they received reward smiles, they reacted from feeling as much stress and producing as much cortisol."

The effect of affiliative smiles was closer to that of reward smiles -- interesting, but hard to interpret, Niedenthal says, because the affiliative message in the judging context was probably hard for the speakers to understand.

Other research has shown that people with greater variation in the rate at which their hearts beat are better able to understand social cues such as facial expressions.

Smile study participants with high heart-rate variability indeed show stronger physiological reactions to the different smiles.

But, Martin says, rate variability is not innate and unalterable. In fact, a long list of disorders -- obesity, cardiovascular disease, autism, and anxiety and depression among them -- can drag down heart-rate variability.

That may, in turn, make people worse at recognizing and reacting to social signals such as dominance and reward smiles.

"We are all individuals walking around in the world with different bodies. You may be really anxious. You may be in really good shape," Martin says. "Those things that we carry around with us change the way we perceive the world in very sensitive and personal ways."

How to get started as a whiskey drinker

whiskey drinker will benefit from a helpful starter guide. Below you'll find everything you need to know to fool even the most devout whiskey enthusiast.

Whiskey, Bourbon, Rye and Scotch

Whiskey is the generic term given to distilled spirits made from grain mash. Bourbon, rye and scotch are all types of whiskey; as such they are all similar in taste and appearance. The difference between the types of whiskey depend on the types of grain used, the location in which it was distilled, the length of aging and the type of casks used in the process.

Each type of whiskey has its own rules and regulations governing the type: for example, you cannot make scotch outside of Scotland.

Where to Get Started

The first question a new whiskey drinker asks is which type of whiskey to try first. The best answer to this is to start with the whiskey with the best selection where you live. If you're American, you're going to want to get into bourbon. If you're Canadian, you'll want to look into scotch.

The reason for this is economic: the more selection you have of a specific type of whiskey, the more likely you are to find quality bottles at lower prices.

You will want to start with a good beginner whiskey, something light and easy on the palate. If your first foray into whiskey is with an Islay scotch, you may derail yourself before you ever get started.

Suggestions

Bourbon: Start with some American classics: Maker's Mark or Wild Turkey.

Scotch: Get a reasonably priced highland malt: Aberlour 10 or a Glenmorangie 12

Single Malt, Single Cask or Blended

There are three subtypes of whiskey. Single malt whiskey is made from mixing whiskey distilled at the same distillery, the age being the age of the youngest whiskey added. This is the most common type of whiskey you

Single cask whiskey is bottled entirely from a single cask. This whiskey is typically found at smaller distilleries or as novelty/high-end lines from some of the major brands.

Blended whiskey is made by blending together whiskey of the same main type (it's exceptionally rare for people to mix types, such as scotch with bourbon).

You will run into people who will act as though blended whiskey is a joke, which isn't entirely true. Some companies, such as Johnnie Walker, only make blended whisky. They don't distill any of their own spirits, instead choosing whisky from other distilleries with specific traits to mix and blend into a new drink.

Some blended whiskey can be very good, but as a beginner it's best to stick to single malts. This way you can begin to learn what you truly like and do not like in a whiskey, as to have an opinion before you try to decide if Johnnie Walker Blue Label is worth the price tag.

How to Drink Whiskey

Now that you bought yourself a bottle of golden fire, you need to figure out how to drink it. There are four ways to drink whiskey:

Neat: Whiskey neat (room temperature whiskey in a glass) is considered by many to be the only "pure" way to drink a good whiskey. The concept is to taste the spirit as it was distilled, rather than diluting it as the distiller hadn't intended.

While the logic behind this is solid, this is typically a very poor way to drink a fine whiskey.

With Water: The best way to drink good whiskey is with some water. While people will claim adding water will open up the bouquet and a bunch of other random things, the real reason is more functional.

First, take a tiny sip of your whiskey neat. Chances are, especially if it's cask strength, you will feel your taste buds buzzing as the liquid hits your tongue. This is the alcohol anesthetizing your taste buds. If you continue to Real men drink whiskey. But unfortunately, getting into the world of whiskey can be more than a little drink the whiskey neat, you will eventually lose the ability to truly taste the drink; your tongue will grow numb.

You should add just a capful of water (only use clear distilled or spring water. Chlorine will ruin you drink). With so many different brands, varieties, terms, ways to drink and strong opinions in the mix, any beginner If after another small taste you still feel that "buzzing," add another capful. Repeat until you have the minimum amount of water possible, without melting your tongue. Now you can enjoy the entire glass, tasting it truly through the last drop.

> On the Rocks: Many whiskey drinkers like their spirit on the rocks. The argument against this is two-fold: Ice is typically made from tap water, meaning it's full of chlorine. As the ice melts it will water down your drink.

> If you like to drink ice-cold whiskey, you can get around these issues by making your own ice from highquality water and by keeping a dish and spoon next to your glass so you can remove the ice once the whiskey is watered to your liking.

> Cocktail: Finally, you can mix whiskey into a cocktail or mixed drink. If you're doing this please do not use high-end whiskey. While one should never drink the cheapest/worst whiskey you can buy, use middle-ground spirits for your cocktails. You always want to be drinking quality whiskey, but mixing $300 bourbon into a whiskey bourbon sour is a stupid, wasteful act. Suggestion: Bulleit bourbon. It's not too expensive, but it's a terrific drink to have on its own or in a whiskey cocktail.

It's all About You

To be perfectly honest, there is no wrong way to drink whiskey. Aside from mixing something high-end with Coke, there is no wrong way to enjoy your drink. However you enjoy your drink is the best way to drink it. If you want to let your ice melt entirely, let your ice melt entirely.

If someone tries to tell you otherwise, smile and know they're just being a snob.

Real men enjoy their whiskey, how you enjoy it is up to you.

As a high school student, Daniela Kanz faced the possibility that family which led to a job at the Internal Revenue Service office in Brooklyn. financial problems might prevent her from graduating. She not only found a way to succeed, she continued a pattern of lifelong learning to advanced degrees. Shared Stories is a weekly column featuring articles by participants in a writing class at the Norwalk Senior Center. #### By Daniela Kanz

My high school diploma is probably the first of my academic and professional accomplishments. I most likely would not have finished high school without the special program that was available to me. As a Cooperative Student, I alternated working at the Lord & Taylor Department Store in Manhattan with attending school every other week. This allowed me to help my family financially, yet still stay in school until graduation.

wage. Typing on a typewriter that had huge letters to imprint the names of the owners on stock certificates is a fond memory. As I traveled on the subway to and from work, I kept noticing the advertisements for the Speedwriting Secretarial School. I decided to enroll, with my eye on a promotion to secretary. Upon completion of the course, I became secretary to the manager of our branch.

After earning enough vacation time, I made a trip to Lakewood, California, to visit friends. I followed their suggestion to check out North American Aviation in Downey for a job – just to see what might transpire.

I passed the stenography test, but they offered me the clerk-typist position for more salary than I made at the bank as a secretary. When I called my boss at the bank to tell him I would not be returning to New York from vacation, he was not surprised.

He stated, "I was stationed in California during the war. I knew you wouldn't be back." I worked for North American (later Rockwell) for five years and during that time met the man who would become my husband. We had a whirlwind courtship and married in 1962. I continued working until 1964 when I had my first child.

Intermittently between children - I had two more, one in 1966 and one in 1969 - I worked as a waitress out of the union hall. I felt comfortable going back to work and adding to the family income, and this job allowed me the flexible hours needed for my children.

My sister-in-law encouraged me to join her, and I made more money working part-time as a waitress than I did in an office. It was a great experience, with so many fond memories, but that is another story.

For a variety of reasons, we moved to Hobbs, New Mexico, in 1975 where we had our own business – Kanz & Daughters Chesport Mart. It was a little store with a couple of gas pumps - similar to a Seven-Eleven - and the working hours allowed us more family time together.

Our adventure into entrepreneurism did not go well. My job at the Sears Catalog Store in Hobbs provided additional income to the family. I enjoyed working the teletype machine, typing the customer orders and transmitting to Dallas. I challenged myself to exceed the amount of orders typed from one day to the next.

As a part-time employee, I received no benefits, so I wanted to go back to office work where I might earn higher wages and benefits.

Since I had no recent work experience in an office, I went to New Mexico Junior College to get a Secretarial Certificate. I was so glad I did as I was able to land a job at a bank as a word processing operator on an IBM Mag Card system.

I progressed to supervisor of a five-unit CPT Word Processing Center at the bank and developed a unique reporting system to management. For this I received recognition in a magazine and a certificate for this accomplishment.

As things progressed, I decided to complete an Associate of Arts Degree. I had come a long way from being the young girl who had once faced the possibility of not finishing high school.

Sadly, the bank crisis of the '80s hit our bank. When the Word Processing Center closed, I became a secretary in the Consumer Loan Department. I watched with trepidation when the FDIC agents came through the bank. The bank failed soon after.

In 1985, we came to Los Angeles for my husband's South Gate High School 25th Class Reunion. Norris Industries, where he previously worked, asked him to return. I found a job as a teacher of computer software, typing, and career development at the Travel and Trade Career Institute in Long Beach.

In time I took advantage of a better opportunity and worked for eleven years at a company called ElectroCom Automation. This company installed the 9-1-1 system for the Los Angeles Sheriff's Department.

When I started, the company was still in contract negotiations, so I worked the contract 'from cradle-to-grave,' as they say. After completing the system, the company managed a maintenance agreement.

I was able to further my education and attend the University of Phoenix while employed at ElectroCom. At that time, one could complete two years of credits in eighteen months. I really enjoyed working in Study Groups, which were a main feature of the program. The thought was that one could accomplish more in a group than individually.

I am grateful to ElectroCom for the financial assistance which enabled me to receive my Bachelor of Science, Business Administration degree

I wanted to be a classroom teacher, but was terrified of taking the CBEST test required for a credential. When I applied for a classified position at the Paramount School District, the Superintendent was among the interview panel. He asked me why I did not teach adults.

He said, "You don't need the CBEST for an Adult Ed Credential." He sent me all the information I needed about credential requirements. After earning my credential, I taught computer classes for the ABC Adult School District and Paramount Adult Education.

During my credential course work, I completed a research assignment that led to a Reciprocity Agreement between Cerritos College and ABC Adult School whereby a student at ABC taking a computer class could acquire college credit for that class at Cerritos College. I do not know if this agreement stands today.

While I am proud of my academic and professional accomplishments, they do not hold a candle to the accomplishment of being married to a wonderful man for a little over forty years and producing three daughters and two grandchildren. Only time will tell what accomplishments they may have in their lives.

Mailboxes in Late Winter

It's a motley lot. A few still stand at attention like sentries at the ends of their driveways, but more lean askance as if they'd just received a blow to the head, and in fact they've received many, all winter, from jets of wet snow shooting off the curved, tapered blade of the plow. Some look wobbly, cocked at oddball angles or slumping forlornly on precariously listing posts. One box bows steeply forward, as if in disgrace, its door lolling sideways, unhinged. Others are dented, battered, streaked with rust, bandaged in duct tape, crisscrossed with clothesline or bungee cords. ...l almost feel sorry for them, worn out by the long winter, off-kilter, not knowing what hit them, trying to hold themselves together, as they wait for news from spring.

utilized inside Los Padrinos Juvenile

"Our program is multi-sensory; what that means is it works on the mind and the body," said Angel. "A lot of these kids, some of their issues have to do with anxiety.

"Everyone has what we call the 'doubtful internal voice;' that's the voice that says 'I can't do this, I'm stupid, I'm afraid, I'm this,' any voice that is counter to the desire. That voice with kids in the, say juvenile detention camps - those kids that have fallen really behind dominates their mind...we're working to transform that voice."

The program runs for six weeks, bi-weekly for 60 minutes per class led by a certified Reading and Rhythm facilitator. Sessions begin with group drumming exercises that are meant to engage students physiologically, cognitively and emotionally. Students then read aloud to a rhythmic beat played by the facilitator.

The program concludes with assessments of each student.

> "I think this is where we're at, because we are capable of tremendous expansion," said Angel. "We can train regular teachers to do this...that's our goal, just in the immediate community, is to be able to do outreach."

> Angel says awareness and willingness is a "big thing" in that goal becoming a reality.

"We have the capacity, it's just willingness and capital," said Angel. "We have talked to the council, we have volunteers from the community here that work for us... we have started the conversation...I know we're still ahead of the curve. but like I said the neuroscience is out there... We have a lot of support, but again it's getting the people in the community to take a look at the data, look at what we're doing and say 'ok, this is the future, this is

Risher Mortuary named Small Business of the Year

► The family-owned mortuary gives thousands of dollars in student scholarships each year.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY – Risher Mortuary and Cremation Services was awarded the Small Business of the Year Award by the Downey Chamber of Commerce last week.

Risher Mortuary began in 1959 under Raymond and Marjorie Risher in the City of Montebello, with another arrangement office located in Downey on Downey Avenue and 3rd Street. Currently, the mortuary is owned and operated by Barbara and Gregory Welch, the daughter and son-in-law of the Rishers.

The Welch's split up duties within the business, with Barbara handing more internal responsibilities and Greg taking on more of the service and public relations aspects.

As believers in the Christian faith, Greg says that their work is "a

"We decided this is a business that is really like a ministry; we're ministering to the bereaved," said Welch. "We champion the fact that we're believers...so we run our business from a very highly ethical standpoint."

This is in contrast, Welch says, to a more capitalist approach that other mortuaries take.

"There is such upselling...that's expected," said Welch. "But what many mortuaries do is they try to upsell you into a casket that you don't need or can't afford. Additional services that would be maybe nice; kind of a nice to have not a need to

This can even include taking advantage of heightened emotions, persuading grieving loved ones to pay extra on unnecessary amenities, such as a casket with a "50 year guarantee."

"We've seen mortuaries actually play the guilt trip; we've had mortuaries say 'well doesn't your dad deserve the best..., said Welch. "It's a chance to play on the emotion."

Risher Mortuary has also made investments back into the community through scholarships given to six schools in the cities of Downey and Montebello.

These scholarships are unique in that they are not awarded on grade point average or career intent, but rather the good deeds of the individual student.

"We offer scholarships to Downey and Warren, Columbus, Downey Calvary and St. Pius Matthias," said Welch. call it the Risher Mortuary and Cremation Service Caring for Others Scholarship. The premise for that scholarship is...it doesn't matter what you do in your life, but what you should do is care for others.

We don't care what they study, we just want them to tell us how do you plan on using your education to serve and care for others."

It is these attributes that Welch believes has earned the mortuary several awards for good service, including the recent nod from the Chamber.

Welch says that he and Barbara plan on continuing their service to their communities "well into our 80's," once again citing what he feels is the ministry nature of their work. However, when it comes time to pass the torch, he says any one of their four kids can take the reigns.

"We've had that conversation," said Welch. "We're not worried about it. We think the kids will probably want to; one of the four or maybe more. But that's our legacy to Barb's parents and continuing down

NORWALK – Norwalk's annual State of the City address was presented by new city manager Jesus Gomez, along with a host of others, last Friday, March 2, at the DoubleTree Hotel.

Speaking last, Gomez was preceded by three other presenters: deputy city managers Gary Di Corpo and Kevin Gano, along with Norwalk Sheriff Station Captain James DiCorpo, doubling this year as master of ceremonies, introduced the first speaker with the opening remarks, president of the Norwalk Community Coordinating Council, Gordon Stefenhagen.

Afterward, Stefenhagen's remarks were followed by the invocation by Pastor Gerald Mitchell of the Pioneer Baptist Church.

Former Norwalk mayor and Air Force veteran Marcel Rodarte led the room in the Pledge of Allegiance with Danielle Bowie singing her rendition of the National Anthem.

Leading off the formal presentations was Tatreau. He spoke specifically to the declining incidents of violent crimes against the national averages while acknowledging that those numbers may not tell the were nine homicides in Norwalk when compared to surrounding communities like Bellflower, Cerritos, Whittier, Pico Rivera, and Lakewood.

Up next was new deputy city manager Gano with the goals, "To provide our citizens with a real and perceived sense of safety and security."

Gano cited recent successes in two specific instances regarding a dilapidated house and an unlawfully parked car on one of Norwalk's encouraged enforcement of existing laws to deal with problems within city limits. This "code enforcement" approach was well received by the audience with their applause.

Additional comments were directed to the need to work with all Public Safety oriented agencies including, "probation, District Attorney, courts, and child and family services."

Citing the goals of "increasing the number of Public Safety Officers, replacing worn equipment, being more visible and engaging and empowering the community," were his plans for the future safety and well-being of Norwalk residents.

Finally, he reminded the audience of the need to work with "faith-based organizations, food and shelter organizations and schools," all while focusing on families.

With 30 calendar days under his belt at the helm of the City of Norwalk, new city manager Gomez proceeded to review the direction the city has seen in the last 12-month

Citing many statistics, he showed that Norwalk was a young age city with a high (65%) owner occupancy within the city. This rate was highest amongst the nine local municipalities named in his presentation.

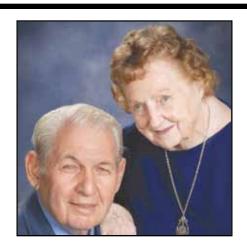

Education, healthcare and social assistance were the largest area of careers (20.4%) that Norwalk residents chose.

The top employees in the city were Cerritos College, Los Angeles County, Metropolitan State Hospital, Norwalk-La Mirada Unified School District and the City of Norwalk. Others included Target Stores, Costco, Little Lake School District, Doty Brothers and Coast Plaza Hospital.

Gomez's economic outlook included analyzing prospective development, creating a strategy to attain it and to implement the plan by "reaching out to stakeholders," marketing the idea while assisting procurement of financing, and procurement.

After nearly three hours, the outlook of the city was positive and headed in the right direction.

John Matarazzo and Juanita McGhee will be married 70 years Monday.

Downey couple celebrates 70th anniversary

DOWNEY - John Matarazzo and Juanita McGhee are happily celebrating their 70th wedding anniversary.

John and Nita were married on the 12th of March, 1948 after meeting on a blind date in the previous October. John was a corporal in the Army Air Corps stationed at Scott Air Force Base near Belleville, Ill. After a 6-month romance, they married and made their home in Belleville. On Dec 16, 1949 they gave birth to their son, Daniel.

John had risen to the rank of Staff Sargent when they decided to move back to his home town of Downey, California. They lived downtown for four years until they moved into their only home where they still live in the newly-built suburbs of Downey where they gave birth to their daughter, Juanita was an efficient domestic engineer and John became a Los Angeles County marshal where he retired in 28 years as a Lieutenant.

Juanita began attending the Downey United Methodist Church where she became a member in 1950. John followed shortly after. They continue to be very active church members and together give communion to house bound church members.

Retirement brought much travel for them and they became expert "Cruisers" aboard many ships. Today they enjoy their family which has expanded to two granddaughters, Jennifer and Trissa, and their husbands Eric and Josh along with two great grandsons, Aiden and Joshua, and a big white cat named Ally.
