Downey students invent innovative space suit, win national prize

▶ Downey High School students won the top prize at the Conrad Spirit of Innovation Challenge.

Students created a custom space suit that fights muscle atrophy among astronauts.

DOWNEY – The Downey Space Innovators, a team of engineering students from Downey High School, came home world champions after competing against student teams from around the globe in the Conrad Spirit of Innovation Challenge.

Traveling to the NASA Kennedy Space Center in Cape Canaveral, Florida, at the end of April, the Downey Space Innovators competed in the category of Aerospace and Aviation against teams from as far as Australia, Canada, China, India, Nigeria and Thailand.

This team, advised by Downey High engineering teacher Glenn Yamasaki, consists of five Vikings: Michelle Kim, Earldrene Dubongco, Akhil Sharma, Christian Echeveste and Evan Saracay.

The Conrad Spirit of Innovation Challenge was founded by Nancy Conrad in honor of her late husband, astronaut, innovator and entrepreneur Charles "Pete" Conrad, Jr. The Conrad Challenge is an annual, multi-phase innovation and entrepreneurial competition that challenges students in four areas: Aerospace and Aviation, Cyber Technology and Security, Energy and Environment, and presentation. Admission to the festival is free. The festival is entering its sixth year.

TV producer is guest speaker at historical society

DOWNEY -- Emmy Award nominee and Peabody Award winner Brian Tessier will be the guest speaker at the Downey Historical Society's next meeting, May 24, at 7:30 p.m. at the Barbara J. Riley Center.

Tessier has worked as a producer and associate producer on numerous A&E Biography episodes, including profiles as diverse as Dr. Seuss, Roman Polanski, Marvin Gaye and Eva Braun.

He received a Primetime Emmy nomination for "Stardust: The Bette Davis Story" and praise from critic Tom Shales, who called the film "one of the most personal, intimate and shocking biographical documentaries ever made on a movie star."

the Peabody-winning "Inventing LA: The Chandlers and their Times," Tessier amassed a striking collection of archival material that Variety hailed as "absolute aces."

Tessier currently oversees all budgets, schedules, contracts and clearances for PJP, including those for Johnny Carson and all 50 episodes of Carson on TCM hosted by Conan O'Brien.

Tessier's talk in Downey is free and open to the public. It will take place in the community center's John Downey Room.

How to wrestle your data from data brokers, Silicon Valley — and Cambridge Analytica

► As more Americans put their personal information online, that data is mined and collected by tech companies and political operatives.

What do they know?

By Jeremy B. Merrill ProPublica

LOS ANGELES – Cambridge Analytica thinks that I'm a "Very Republican." Another political data firm, ALC Digital, has concluded I'm a "Socially Conservative," Republican, "Boomer Voter." In fact, I'm a 27-yearold millennial with no set party allegiance.

For all the fanfare, the burgeoning field of mining our personal data remains an inexact

One thing is certain: My personal data, and likely yours, is in more hands than ever. Tech firms, data brokers and political consultants build profiles of what they know or think they can reasonably guess about your purchasing habits, personality, hobbies and even what political issues you care about.

You can find out what those companies know about you but be prepared to be stubborn. Very stubborn. To demonstrate how this works, we've chosen a couple from three major categories: data brokers, big tech firms and political data consultants.

will show you on their websites, others will make you ask for your digital profile via the U.S. mail. And then there's Cambridge Analytica, the controversial Trump campaign vendor that has come under intense fire in light of a report in the British newspaper The Observer and in The New York Times that the company used improperly obtained data from Facebook to help build voter profiles.

the British data firm have on you, Americans) the rights to see the you're going to need both stamps data European companies compile and a "cheque."

Once you see your data, you'll have a much better understanding of how this shadowy corner of the new economy works. You'll see what they know about you ... and you'll probably have some hypotheses about where this data is coming from. You'll also probably see some predictions about who you are that are hilariously wrong.

And if you do obtain your data from any of these companies, please let us know your thoughts at politicaldata@propublica.org. We won't share or publish what you say (unless you tell us that's it's OK).

Cambridge Analytica and Other Political Consultants

It worked. I got back a spreadsheet of data about me. But it took months, cost ten pounds — and I had to give them a photo seemingly personal information ID and two utility bills. Presumably they didn't want my personal data falling into the wrong hands.

How You Can Request Your Data From Cambridge Analytica:

Visit Cambridge Analytica's website and fill out their web form.

After you submit the form, the page will immediately request that you email to data.compliance@ cambridgeanalytica.org a photo ID and two copies of your utility bills or bank statements, to prove your identity. This page will also include the company's bank account details.

Find a way to send them 10 GBP. You can try wiring this from your bank, though it may cost you an additional $25 or so — or ask a friend in the UK to go to their bank and get a cashier's check. Your American bank probably won't let you write a GBP-denominated check. Two services I tried, Xoom me that data about me was likely transmitted to Cambridge Analytica because a person with whom I am "friends" on the social network had taken the now-infamous "This Is Your Digital Life" quiz. For what it's worth, my data shows no sign of anything derived from Facebook.

What You Might Get Back From Cambridge Analytica:

Cambridge Analytica had generated 13 data points about my views: 10 political issues, ranked by importance; two guesses at my partisan leanings (one blank); and a guess at whether I would turn out in the 2016 general election.

They told me that the lower the rank, the higher the predicted importance of the issue to me.

Alongside that data labeled I lived in New York.) "models" were two other types of data that are run-of-the-mill and widely used by political consultants. It included my address, my electoral district, the a service that lets advertisers target census tract I live in and my date of

The spreadsheet included a few rows of "election returns" previous elections in New York State in which I had voted. (Intriguingly, Cambridge Analytica missed that I had voted in 2015's snoozefest of a vote-for-five-of-these-five judicial election. It also didn't know about elections in which I had voted in North Carolina, where I lived before

The GOP's hostile language

It's an established American tradition to call people what they wish to be called. That's why after he converted religions, nearly everyone — except a few die-hard bigots — called the heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali instead of Cassius Clay. Marion Morrison chose to become John Wayne. Ilyena Lydia Vasilievna Mironov would later become Dame Helen Mirren, and Caryn Johnson would achieve fame and fortune as Whoopi Goldberg.

But some Republicans, included among them the current GOP president, regularly choose to ignore this national custom by refusing to address or refer to their political adversaries as belonging to — what it has been almost universally called since 1828 — the Democratic Party. Instead, by deliberately dropping the last two letters and ungrammatically substituting an adjective for a noun, some partisans seek to disparage the party of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson.

Recently, Marc Short, the presidential assistant with the challenging responsibility of managing this White House's relations with the House and the Senate, was interviewed one-on-one on PBS NewsHour by Amna Nawaz. Facing an election year in which the Republican congressional of Bill Clinton and Barack Obama as "Democrat administrations."

President Trump had tweeted late last year about getting "no Democrat votes" in the Senate for his budget plan and the "Wacky Congresswoman" who was "killing the "Democrat Party" — a term which is harsher to the ear than the more melodic "Democratic" and supposedly robs the Democrats of all popular identification with the appealing virtues of social equality and anti-snobbishness.

Ever since Wisconsin's redbaiting — and, eventually, censured Joseph R. McCarthy popularized the epithet "Democrat Party," conservative partisans have mostly employed it publicly as a sort of secret verbal handshake to prove one's GOP credentials while disparaging the

There have been happy exceptions. In 2008, the year Republicans nominated Arizona Sen. and maverick John McCain, the Party platform committee voted down a proposal to call the opposition the "Democrat has provided weekly political analysis and commentary for the PBS Party" in the platform. Then-Mississippi Gov. and committee Chairman Haley Barbour explained, "We probably should use what the actual name majority is clearly threatened, Short insisted on referring to the presidencies is," a position endorsed by one Indiana committee member who argued, "We should afford them the respect they are entitled and call them by their legal name."

> Just as most Irish-Americans reject being called "micks," and Catholics don't like to be referred to as adherents of the "Church of Rome" any more than Jewish Americans appreciate being told they are "of the Hebrew persuasion," members of the Democratic Party do not like to be told they belong to the "Democrat Party."

> If the Republicans are sincerely interested in winning in 2020, for what would be only the second time having a majority of the national vote in the last eight presidential elections, they — and their leader, President Donald J. Trump — could begin by calling their fellow Americans across the aisle members of the Democratic Party. Sometimes it's not just how you say it; it really is what you say.

The dominant force in America and many other Western countries today is fear of the left.

This is a result of the fact that the most dynamic religion of the past 100 years has been neither Christianity nor Islam. It has been leftism. Whoever does not recognize this does not understand the contemporary Leftism — in its incarnations, such as Marxism, communism and socialism; expressed through egalitarianism, environmentalism and feminism; in its denigration of capitalism and Western civilization, especially America and Israel; in its supplanting of Christianity and Judaism; through its influence on Christianity and Judaism; in its celebration of race; and in its replacing of reason with romanticism — has almost completely taken over the news and entertainment media and institutions of education.

There is a largely (though not entirely) nonviolent reign of ideological terror in America. In almost every area of life, people fear antagonizing the left.

Last week, before my speech at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, a man employed by the university (I will not say in what department) walked over to me, looked around to see whether anyone was watching and whispered in my ear, "I'm a conservative."

This happens just about everywhere I speak. People whisper — yes, whisper — that they are conservative or they support Trump. The last time I experienced people looking around to check whether they were seen speaking to me was with dissidents in the Soviet Union.

People call my radio show from all over the country to say that their fellow musicians, nurses, teachers or employees do not know that they are conservative, let alone that they support the president.

I have called contemporary conservatives in America Marranos, the name given during the 15th-century Spanish Inquisition to Jews who hid their Judaism while appearing to be Catholics, lest they be persecuted. I do not compare the consequences: Losing one's friends or employment is not the same as losing one's home or one's life. But otherwise, the label is apt.

Because of my widely covered conducting of the Santa Monica Symphony Orchestra at the Walt Disney Concert Hall last summer, members of some of the most prestigious orchestras in America have opened up to me, telling me they are conservative but would never reveal this fact to their fellow musicians. They fear either losing their position or, more likely, being socially ostracized.

Why are so many Democrats shocked when a Republican is elected president? Because, as they themselves say, they "don't know anyone" who voted for the Republican. The primary reason for this is the people in their life who voted for Donald Trump — professional colleagues, and even friends and relatives — are afraid to tell them.

There are two reasons the left labels most conservatives and all Trump supporters "white supremacists," "neo-Nazis" and "racists." One is to defeat conservatives without having to defeat conservative ideas. The other is to instill fear: Speak out and you will suffer the consequences.

Parents call my radio show and ask what they should tell their children at college when they ask whether they should risk receiving a lower grade for divulging their conservative politics in a paper or on an exam.

It is becoming more and more common for leftist mobs to gather in front of a conservative's home, scream epithets at the conservative's family members and vandalize the home. Just last week, the Associated Press reported: "Protesters are targeting the northern Virginia home of the National Rifle Association's top lobbyist ... Chris Cox ... as well as his wife's nearby decorating business. ... Libby Locke, a lawyer for the Cox family, said the vandalism included spraying fake blood and defacing the home with stickers."

Left-wing student mobs routinely take over the offices of university deans, professors and even presidents. The few non-left-wing professors on any campus understand their lives will be made miserable if they speak out. The widely reported case of liberal biology professor Bret Weinstein at Evergreen State College in Washington is directly on point.

In May 2017, professor Weinstein was surrounded by about 50 left-wing students, who screamed curses at him outside of his classroom for refusing to participate in an event during which white people were asked to leave the campus for a day.

On May 24, 2017, Weinstein tweeted: "the police told me I am not safe on campus. They can not protect me."

Within a few months, left-wing students and the left-wing Evergreen administration made life so miserable for the lifelong liberal professor he left the university.

Since the left began spreading the lie that a white police officer in Ferguson, Missouri, shot a black youth because he, like most police officers, is a racist, police officers in many cities have feared taking proactive measures to prevent violent crime in black neighborhoods. They fear the left-wing mob known as the news media will ruin their reputation and end their career.

In the recent case of a Philadelphia Starbucks manager who asked two black men to purchase something before giving them the code to the restroom, Starbucks immediately appeared the left-wing mob. The company didn't wait until any facts came out; it simply abandoned the manager and announced it would close every U.S. store one day in May to educate all Starbucks employees about "unconscious bias."

These are only a few examples of the left-wing intimidation that dominates much of American life.

It does so in large measure because liberals are either too afraid to confront the left or they don't understand that the American left, not the American right, is the mortal enemy of liberalism.

Stopping drivers without a legal justification is unconstitutional, even in the name of young love

By Jacob Sullum

After a police officer pulls over a teenage girl without any legal justification and frightens her to the verge of tears, the local press portrays the incident as charming rather than alarming. You know what that means: Prom season is upon us.

The cop-assisted promposal, in which police help a teenager carry out a prank that ends with an invitation to the big dance, has become a familiar springtime ritual, documented in online videos and feel-good newspaper stories. But beneath the warm and fuzzy images of adolescent couples lurks a disturbing willingness to tolerate abuses of power by police officers as long as their motives are pure.

When a cop makes a traffic stop, he is using his special powers as an armed agent of the state to forcibly detain someone. Under the Fourth Amendment, which prohibits "unreasonable searches and seizures," he needs a good reason to use those powers — typically, "reasonable suspicion" of a crime or traffic violation.

There is no promposal exception to the Fourth Amendment. Yet police officers across the country are happy to make traffic stops in the name of young love.

Last month, for instance, Isaac Nusbaum, a student at White Knoll High School in Lexington, South Carolina, enlisted the help of South Congaree and a sign that said, "Will you be my partner N crime and go to prom with

The State, a newspaper based in Columbia, South Carolina's capital, covered the incident as a heartwarming human interest story, although it conceded that getting pulled over by the cops "can be a startling experience" and noted that the prank "might have been too realistic" for the object of Nusbaum's affections. "I may have went just a little too far with it when I almost made her cry," Stone admitted on the South Congaree Police Department's Facebook page.

But the important thing, Stone wrote, is that "she said YES" to Nusbaum's "very sweet" invitation. "Thank you," he wrote to the couple, "for letting the Town of South Congaree and myself be part of this special moment for you two."

In another "special" moment last January, police in Oxford, Mississippi, pulled over a teenager who was on a date with his girlfriend and pretended to arrest him on an outstanding warrant. The boy revealed the trick by holding up a sign that said, "I'm locked up so I can lock you down for

"I'm about to start crying," the girl says in the promposal video after Twitter: @jacobsullum. seeing the sign. "This is not funny. You scared me."

A teenage Kansas couple was so enamored of the false-arrest theme

Officer Eddie Stone to arrange a "fake traffic stop" for his girlfriend, that the pair carried it over to the prom itself. After a Greenwood County Candice Derrick. Nusbaum was hiding in Stone's police truck with flowers sheriff's deputy pulled Alexis Berndt over so her boyfriend, Daniel Huber, could surprise her with a promposal sign ("Can I cop you into going to prom"), she turned the tables by arranging for him to be handcuffed while the couple rode to the prom in a police car.

> My friend Lauren Krisai, a policy analyst at the Justice Action Network, picked that last example as "this year's most outrageous promposal." Despite the positive press coverage such stunts receive, she says, they "are neither cute nor legal."

Though the cuteness of these prom pranks is in the eye of the beholder, their legality is not. Stopping drivers without a legal justification is unconstitutional, and overlooking that point for the sake of something as frivolous as a prom invitation invites cops to cut corners when the stakes are more serious.

Police are supposed to abide by the Constitution even when doing so makes it harder to convict someone they're convinced is guilty. They should not be taking their cues from people who think it's not just OK but positively delightful to violate the Fourth Amendment so that Dan can ask Lexi to the prom.

City Council's lack of action

Dear Editor:

When I spoke April 24 at the Downey City Council meeting to urge the council to speak up and oppose Kaiser Permanente's plans to eliminate 61 jobs in Downey, I expected the council to support us.

Instead, no councilmember said anything. In fact, I didn't know how any of them felt until reading Councilmember Fernando Vasquez's quote in the paper ("Healthcare Workers Bring Kaiser Protest to City Hall," 4/26/18) when he described the layoffs as "a private matter" that he "hoped both parties could work it out."

Talk about a failure of leadership. There's all kinds of things the City Council can do to protect these jobs. They can speak out, they can hold hearings and they can pass a resolution putting the city on record against

The City Council claims it wants to attract jobs to the city but then acts like there's nothing they can do when jobs are threatened. It doesn't make sense.

No more Tony Mendoza

Once again this is the time when we begin receiving the onslaught of political flyers and robocall phone messages seeking our support for candidates running for office. This week, I received many of those flyers, one of which was from Tony Mendoza for State Senate.

Many of us in the public are aware that Mr. Mendoza recently resigned his seat while under investigation for sexual harassment, prior to the conclusion of the investigation -- an interesting move for someone who vociferously proclaimed his innocence.

His resignation was soon followed by a leave of absence from our Assemblymember, Cristina Garcia, who is also facing similar charges. This left residents like me with no elected representation in Sacramento.

Mr. Mendoza's flyer asks that I "re-elect" him. Well, he is not my senator; right now I have no senator, and I choose not to vote for him.

I have been a Democrat since I first voted in 1970 but I would rather vote for a Republican than see him return to office. I truly hope that voters in in 32nd Senate District will elect a candidate that won't embarrass and abandon us.

REVIEW: The stakes have never been higher for the Avengers in 'Infinity War'

► The blockbuster juggles an array of Marvel Comics superheroes and manages to advance a storyline 10 years in the making.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

We may not have initially known it when we sat down in theaters and were introduced to Tony Stark / in 2008, but this is the moment that we've been slowly building to over the last decade: The Infinity War.

have never seen a Marvel Cinematic Universe (MCU) movie before (and if you haven't, what rock have you been under?). The film isn't built for epic story progression or character development – all of that can be found between Iron Man (2008) and Black Panther (2017).

No, instead Infinity War thrusts you immediately into the chaos that is left in the wake of Thanos (Josh Brolin) and his quest for the Infinity Stones formation of The Avengers. They cast. didn't know it at the time, but he's the reason Tony and Bruce Banner / The Hulk (Mark Ruffalo) created Ultron (even if that didn't go particularly well) back in Avengers Age of Ultron (2015).

Thanos is a madman; he's Ten years. Nineteen movies. Six practically "space-Hitler" (and no, that's not just me trying to be

The end game for Thanos surrounds the completion of the Iron Man (Robert Downey Jr.) back Infinity Gauntlet, an all-powerful weapon that he needs to carry out his plan for humanity.

This movie isn't for those who almost makes you feel for Thanos at each arc and its band of characters certain points. He actually has some tend to weave in and out of one humanity within him.

> He's not just some cookiecutter villain who wants to rule the ups that you never expected you'd world; that's not it at all. Instead, Thanos sees a problem in the world and he aims to fix it. His ultimate goal is barbaric in every sense of the word; however, it is a cause that he believes in fully. Thanos truly believes he is doing the right thing for the world.

So, who's going to try and stop

Thankfully, it's not.

Save for a couple exceptions, if a character was in an MCU movie before and wasn't killed off, then they're likely in this film. While this may seem like it would be overwhelming, Infinity War balances its cast extremely well - instead breaking up several characters into unique little units that follow their own sub-plots.

There are pretty much three story arcs that occur within the film, and for the most part they all happen simultaneously to one The worst part of it all: the movie another. The awesome part is that another almost flawlessly.

> This leads to several hero teamsee. Frankly, you won't know you wanted some of these team ups until they happen, and then when they do you'll be glad they did.

But what about the elephant in

More than anything else, it seems as though the big question on everybody's mind leading up

Infinity War quickly makes it clear that everyone has a whole lot to lose should Thanos succeed. Without giving much away, let me just say this - no one leaves this the film (yes, I've already seen it Spider-Man and for Dr. Strange; twice) that I realized the brilliance it has also raised the stakes for of what Marvel Studios has done.

Political newcomer Karla Salazar joins race for state Assembly ► Karla Salazar has lived in Downey since 2002. This is her first attempt at running for public office.

By Alex Dominguez Staff Writer

DOWNEY – Another Downey resident has announced that she will be running for State Assembly.

Public service is deeply rooted in the background of 58th State Assembly District candidate Karla Salazar, however this current election will be her first.

"This is something that's been on the backburner," said Salazar, "I have a master's in public policy, I got my bachelor's in political science."

Up until recently, the 48-yearold Democrat's priorities have surrounded her family and her son. However, with her son now older, she says it's time to set an example and "stand up for what values and what we feel is the right representation in our region."

"I felt I needed to step up," said Salazar. "I'm not a career politician; this is my first time...For me in terms of what has defined me as a person, as an immigrant myself coming to this country as a child, I have really benefitted from the opportunities that this country afforded to me and my family.

"To me, I have a huge commitment of always wanting to dedicate myself to being in roles where I could be of service to others. Whether it was in the private sector or in the public sector, I always make sure that I was giving back because I feel that I've been given a lot and I feel I need to return for all the opportunities I've been given in this country."

Salazar has resided in Downey since 2002 and grew up and lived within the region since the late seventies.

She received her college education from UCLA.

Currently, Downey and several other cities within the region have been left without representation, as both State Senator Tony Mendoza and Assembly Member Cristina Garcia have stepped down following allegations of sexual misconduct.

As such, the pool of potential candidates vying for the 58th Assembly seat has swelled with seven Democrats and a sole Republican.

Salazar says her over 20 years of place in June.

experience in the public and private sector sets her apart from other candidates.

"How I define my mission is that I want to have the most impact and be able to empower and influence change," said Salazar. "What I like about my background is that I have management experience in working very complex organizations. Since we're managing the sixth largest economy in California, I want to make sure our representatives are at that level of understanding not only complex budgets and organizations but managing diverse staff."

Still, Salazar says she would like to see some sort of public forum to take place before election day. Regardless of result, she says she would even be willing to help set up such an event.

"I've been unpleasantly surprised I'm not really seeing that there's accountability for candidates," said Salazar. "The public needs the opportunity to ask the tough questions; I want to be asked the tough questions. Ask me. Show me that you're going to be transparent, that you have integrity and you're going to represent the region well...to me that's important."

The primary election will take

Closure of Long Beach hospital would hurt community, report concludes LONG BEACH – A report by Los Angeles County's Emergency Medical Services Agency confirms concerns long expressed by Supervisor Janice Hahn and members of the Long Beach and Signal Hill communities that closing Community Medical Center Long Beach would negatively impact local residents' access to emergency medical and psychiatric services, officials announced.

The Impact Evaluation Report was written based on information gathered at a community hearing requested by Supervisor Hahn and held in Long Beach on April 11 on the proposed hospital closure. MemorialCare announced recently that they plan to closure the hospital a full year earlier than previously planned by July 3, 2018.

"This report confirms what we have been worried about since the beginning," said Hahn. "Closing Community Medical Center will hurt Long Beach and Signal Hill residents' access to medical care in emergencies and put a strain on the entire county's emergency services system."

The report details impacts of closing Community Medical Center for the hospital. Long Beach including:

· Longer travel times to reach emergency services

· Longer out-of-service times for EMS personnel engaged in patient transports to more distant hospitals resulting in possible delays in emergency services.

· Loss of geographic availability of basic emergency department services for residents of east Long Beach, Signal Hill, and northwest Seal Beach.

· Longer wait times for patients experiencing non-life-threatening illness or injury in emergency departments of surrounding hospitals.

 \cdot Loss of 30 critical care beds.

· Loss of 28 psychiatric beds.

"This report confirms what we been worried about since the nning," said Hahn. "Closing munity Medical Center will Beach.

• Relocation of only Sexual Assault Response Team in Long Beach which currently operates out of Community Medical Center Long Beach.

Hahn has backed a proposal by Assemblyman Patrick O'Donnell to extend the state deadline for seismic retrofitting of the hospital and give the City of Long Beach more time to find a new operator for the hospital.

Shared Stories: One breath, one step

One fall morning in 2004 was marked by a life-changing event for Mary Nieraeth – she lost consciousness while driving. Shared Stories is a weekly column featuring articles by participants in a writing class at the Norwalk Senior Center. Bonnie Mansell is the instructor for this free class offered through the Cerritos College Adult Education Program. Curated by Carol Kearns.

By Mary Nieraeth

"Don, what happened!?" I screamed. I am in my van alone. Don is at work. It is mid-morning on Friday September 10, 2004. My van is sitting off the main street, partly on the sidewalk and lawn right outside my medical group.

My left arm and shoulder are pinned into the smashed-in driver's side door. I have no clue about what just happened. My body is aching all over and I cannot move without feeling

I look down at my left shin and see a big gash. Blood is running down my lower leg and staining my white sock. What's going on? Why are my coupons scattered all over the carpet? Why is milk all over the front seat? When is someone going to help me? All I want to do is drive my van home but I am stuck on the lawn.

I look out the front van window, positioned on an angle towards my medical group office. I see many people staring out the window down at my car. Then, I hear a tapping on my of consciousness while driving. driver's side window and see a police officer, which startles me. He tries to open the door but it is stuck.

He asks me, "Are you all right? Do you know what I mumble, "No." I am still not sure why he is there or asking me questions.

some questions." I do not believe him! I remember driving to my children's school to drop off items for the festival that starts tonight.

How did I miss the turn into the school? I have been there hundreds of times and could do this in my sleep. I am feeling stressed about taking care of many tasks before the festival. I just want to get this situation over so I can continue with my day as I had planned it.

The officer takes out his clipboard with an Accident Report form attached. He asks me one question after another which feels like a long interrogation. I feel so drained and tired.

I ask him, "Why can't I drive my van home?" Little did I know the dire condition of my van and the dangerous proximity to the busy intersection and traffic signal just 20 feet ahead in the direction I was heading.

The officer asks me to sign the Accident Report form. He tells me he will submit the form to the DMV because I had loss Suddenly, a wave of alarming energy moves through my body as I realize that my driver's license will be confiscated! Thoughts of gloom and doom are rushing through my mind. I just want to escape and drive my van home, hoping I have woken up to a nightmare that will vanish.

The paramedics arrive, pry open my van door, transfer me "Mam, you have been in an accident. I need to ask you to a stretcher and into the ambulance. They drive less than one block to the Emergency Room. This day is the beginning of a long and winding medical journey in search of treatment options for seizures.

I learn how to take one breath and one step at a time.

Bell Gardens native serving aboard future warship

California, native is serving aboard the future USS Portland, an amphibious warship to be homeported in San Diego.

Petty Officer 1st Class Carlos Escalera is a culinary specialist responsible for meal preparation and service.

"The best part of my job is the smile on people's faces while eating and after cooking a great meal," said Escalera.

Portland is a San Antonio-class amphibious transport dock ship that embarks, transports, and land elements of a landing force for a variety of expeditionary warfare missions. These ships provide the Navy and Marine Corps with modern sea-based platforms.

Amphibious transport dock ships support amphibious assault; special operations or expeditionary warfare missions, and can serve as secondary aviation platforms for amphibious ready groups. Because of their inherent capabilities, these ships have been and will continue to be called upon to support humanitarian and other contingency missions on short notice

Escalera has carried lessons learned from his hometown tradition. into his military service.

"My hometown taught me hard work ethic and commitment," said Escalera.

Sailors' jobs are highly varied aboard Portland. More than 400 men and women make up the ship's crew, which keeps all parts of the ship running smoothly, from handling weaponry

How to find out what data brokers know about you

How You Can Request Your Data From ALC Digital:

Here's how to find the predictions about your political beliefs data in Oracle Data Cloud:

Visit http://www.bluekai.com/registry/. If you use an ad blocker, there may not be much to see here.

Click on the Partner Segments tab.

Scroll on through until you find ALC Digital.

You may have to scroll for a while before you find it.

And not everyone appears to have data from ALC Digital, so don't be shocked if you can't find it. If you don't, there may be other fascinating companies with data about who you are in your Oracle file.

What You Might Get Back From ALC Digital:

When I downloaded the data last year, it said I was "Socially Conservative," "Boomer Voter" — as well as a female voter and a tax reform supporter.

Recently, when I checked my data, those categories had disappeared entirely from my data. I had nothing from ALC Digital.

ALC Digital is not required to release this data. It is disclosed via the Oracle Data Cloud. Fran Green, the company's president, said that Aristotle, a longtime political data company, "provides us with consumer data that populates these audiences." She also said that "we do not claim to know people's 'beliefs."

Big Tech

Big tech firms like Google and Facebook tend to make their money by selling ads, so they build extensive profiles of their users' interests and activities. They also depend on their users' goodwill to keep us voluntarily giving them our locations, our browsing histories and plain ol' lists of our friends and interests. (So far, these popular companies have not faced much regulation.) All three make it easy to download the data that they keep on you.

Firms like Google and Facebook firms don't sell your data because it's their competitive advantage. Google's privacy page screams in 72 point type: "We do not sell your personal information to anyone." As websites that we visit frequently, they sell access to our attention, so companies that want to reach you in particular can do so with these companies' sites or other sites that feature their ads.

How You Can Request Your Data From Facebook:

You of course have to have a Facebook account and be logged in:

Visit https://www.facebook.com/settings on your computer.

Click the "Download a copy of your Facebook data" link.

On the next page, click "Start My Archive."

Enter your password, then click "Start My Archive" again.

You'll get an email immediately, and another one saying "Your Facebook download is ready" when your data is ready to be downloaded. You'll get a notification on Facebook, too. Mine took just a few minutes.

Once you get that email, click the link, then click Download Archive. Then reenter your password, which will start a zip file downloading..

Unzip the folder; depending on your computer's operating system, this might be called uncompressing or "expanding." You'll get a folder called something like "facebook-jeremybmerrill," but, of course, with your username instead of mine.

Open the folder and double-click "index.htm" to open it in your web browser.

What You Might Get Back From Facebook

Facebook designed its archive to first show you your profile information. That's all information you typed into Facebook and that you probably intended to be shared with your friends. It's no surprise that Facebook knows what city I live in or what my AIM screen name was — I told Facebook those things so that my friends would know.

But it's a bit of a surprise that they decided to feature a list of my ex-girlfriends — what they blandly termed "Previous Relationships" - so prominently.

As you dig deeper in your archive, you'll find more information that you gave Facebook, but that you might not have expected the social network to keep hold of for years: if you're me, that's the Nickelback concert I apparently RSVPed to, posts about switching high schools and instant messages from my freshman year in college.

But finally, you'll find the creepier information: what Facebook knows about you that you didn't tell it, on the "Ads" page. You'll find "Ads Topics" that Facebook decided you were interested in, like Housing, ESPN or the town of Ellijay, Georgia. And, you'll find a list of advertisers who have obtained your contact information and uploaded it to Facebook, as part of a so-called Custom Audience of specific people to whom they want to show their ads.

You'll find more of that creepy information on your Ads Preferences page. Despite Mark Zuckerberg telling Rep. Jerry McNerney, D-Calif., in a hearing earlier this month that "all of your information is included in your 'download your information,'" my archive didn't include that list of ad categories that can be used to target ads to me. (Some other types of information aren't included in the download, like other people's posts you've liked. Those are listed here, along with where to find them — which, for most, is in your Activity Log.)

This area may include Facebook's guesses about who you are, boiled down from some of your activities. Most Americans' will have a guess about their politics — Facebook says I'm a "moderate" about US Politics — and some will have a guess about so-called "multicultural affinity," which Facebook insists is not a guess about your ethnicity, but rather what sorts of content "you are interested in or will respond well to." For instance, Facebook recently added that I have a "Multicultural Affinity: African American." (I'm white though, because Facebook's definition of "multicultural affinity" is so strange, it's hard to tell if this is an error on Facebook's part.)

Facebook also doesn't include your browsing history — the subject of back-and-forths between Mark Zuckerberg and several members of Congress — it says it keeps that just long enough to boil it down into those "Ad Topics."

For people without Facebook accounts, Facebook says to email datarequests@support.facebook.com or fill out an online form to download what Facebook knows about you. One puzzle here is how Facebook gathers data on people whose identities it may not know. It may know that a person using a phone from Atlanta, Georgia, has accessed a Facebook site and that the same person was last week in Austin, Texas, and before that Cincinnati, but it may not know that that person is me. It's in principle difficult for the company to give the data it collects about logged-out users if it doesn't know exactly who they are.

Google

Like Facebook, Google will give you a zip archive of your data Google's can be much bigger, because you might have stored gigabytes of files in Google Drive or years of emails in Gmail.

But like Facebook, Google does not provide its guesses about your interests, which it uses to target ads. Those guesses are available elsewhere.

How You Can Request Your Data From Google:

Visit https://takeout.google.com/settings/takeout/ to use Google's cutely named Takeout service.

You'll have to pick which data you want to download and examine. You should definitely select My Activity, Location History and Searches. You may not want to download gigabytes of emails, if you use Gmail, since that uses a lot of space and may take a while. supplies, among other things — but isn't any more specific. They (That's also information you shouldn't be surprised that Google didn't tell me what political beliefs they believe I hold. The company keeps — you left it with Gmail so that you could use Google's search expertise to hold on to your emails.)

Google will present you with a few options for how to get your archive. The defaults are fine.

Within a few hours, you should get an email with the subject "Your Google data archive is ready." Click Download Archive and log in again. That should start the download of a file named something like "takeout-20180412T193535.zip."

Unzip the folder; depending on your computer's operating system, this might be called uncompressing or "expanding."

You'll get a folder called Takeout. Open the file inside it called "index.html" in your web browser to explore your archive.

What You Might Get Back From Google:

Once you open the index.html file, you'll see icons for the data you chose in step 2. Try exploring "Ads" under "My Activity" — you'll see a list of times you saw Google Ads, including on apps on your phone.

Google also includes your search history, under "Searches" — in my case, going back to 2013. Google knows what I had forgotten: I Googled a bunch of dinosaurs around Valentine's Day that year ... And it's not just web searches: the Sound Search history reminded me that at some point, I used that service to identify Natalie Imbruglia's Android phone users might want to check the "Android" folder: Google keeps a list of each app you've used on your phone.

Most of the data contained here are records of ways you've directly interacted with Google — and the company really does use those to improve how their services work for me. I'm glad to see my searches auto-completed, for instance.

But the company also creates data about you: Visit the company's Ads Settings page to see some of the "topics" Google guesses you're interested in, and which it uses to personalize the ads you see. Those topics are fairly general — it knows I'm interested in "Politics" — but the company says it has more granular classifications that it doesn't include on the list. Those more granular, hidden classifications are on various topics, from sports to vacations to politics, where Google does generate a guess whether some people are politically "leftleaning" or "right-leaning."

Data Brokers

Here's who really does sell your data. Data brokers like the credit reporting agency Experian and a firm named Epsilon.

These sometimes-shady firms are middlemen who buy your data from tracking firms, survey marketers and retailers, slice and dice the data into "segments," then sell those on to advertisers.

Experian

Experian is best known as a credit reporting firm, but your credit cards aren't all they keep track of. They told me that they "firmly believe people should be made aware of how their data is being used" — so if you print and mail them a form, they'll tell you what data they have on you.

effective, successful participants in a world that increasingly relies on the exchange of information to efficiently deliver the products and services consumers demand."

How You Can Request Your Data From Experian:

Visit Experian's Marketing Data Request site and print the Marketing Data Report Request form.

Print a copy of your ID and proof of address.

Mail it all to Experian at

Experian Marketing Services PO Box 40

Allen, TX 75013

Wait for them to mail you something back.

What You Might Get Back From Experian:

Expect to wait a while. I've been waiting almost a month.

They also come up with a guess about your political views that's integrated with Facebook — our Facebook Political Ad Collector project has found that many political candidates use Experian's data to target their Facebook ads to likely supporters.

You should hope to find a guess about your political views that'd be useful to those candidates — as well as categories derived from your purchasing data.

Experian told me they generate the data they have about you from a long list of sources, including public records and "historical catalog purchase information" — as well as calculating it from predictive models.

How You Can Request Your Data From Epsilon:

Visit Epsilon's Marketing Data Summary Request form.

After entering your name and address, Epsilon will answer some of those identity-verification questions that quiz you about your old addresses and cars. If your identity can't be verified with those, Epsilon will ask you to mail in a form.

Wait for Epsilon to mail you your data; it took about a week for

What You Might Get Back From Epsilon:

Epsilon has information on "demographics" and "lifestyle interests" — at the household level. It also includes a list of "household purchases."

It also has data that political candidates use to target their Facebook ads, including Randy Bryce, a Wisconsin Democrat who's seeking his party's nomination to run for retiring Speaker Paul Ryan's seat, and Rep. Tulsi Gabbard, D-Hawaii.

In my case, Epsilon knows I buy clothes, books and home office didn't respond to a request for comment.

Oracle

Oracle's Data Cloud aggregates data about you from Oracle, but also so-called third party data from other companies.

How You Can Request Your Data From Oracle:

Visit http://www.bluekai.com/registry/. If you use an ad blocker, there may not be much to see here.

Explore each tab, from "Basic Info" to "Hobbies & Interests" and "Partner Segments."

Not fun scrolling through all those pages? I have 84 pages of four pieces of data each.

You can't search. All the text is actually images of text. Oracle declined to say why it chose to make their site so hard to use.

What You Might Get Back From Oracle:

My Oracle profile includes nearly 1500 data points, covering all aspects of my life, from my age to my car to how old my children are to whether I buy eggs. These profiles can even say if you're likely to dress your pet in a costume for Halloween. But many of them are off-base or contradictory.

Many companies in Oracle's data, besides ALC Digital, offer guesses about my political views: Data from one company uploaded by AcquireWeb says that my political affiliations are as a Democrat and an Independent ... but also that I'm a "Mild Republican." Another company, an Oracle subsidiary called AddThis, says that I'm a "Liberal." Cuebiq, which calls itself a "location intelligence" company,

If an advertiser wants to show an ad to Spring Break Enthusiasts, Oracle can enable that. I'm apparently a Spring Break Enthusiast. Do I buy eggs? I sure do. Data on Oracle's site associated with AcquireWeb says I'm a cat owner ...

But it also "knows" I'm a dog owner, which I'm not.

Al Gadbut, the CEO of AcquireWeb, explained that the guesses associated with his company weren't based on my personal data, but rather the tendencies of people in my geographical area hence the seemingly contradictory political guesses. He said his firm doesn't generate the data, but rather uploaded it on behalf of other companies. Cuebig's guess was a "probabilistic inference" they drew from location data submitted to them by some app on my phone. Valentina Marastoni-Bieser, Cuebiq's senior vice president of marketing, wouldn't tell me which app it was, though.

Data for sale here includes a long list what TV shows I supposedly — watch.

But it's not all wrong. AddThis can tell that I'm "Young & Hip."

Takeaways:

The above list is just a sampling of the firms that collect your data and try to draw conclusions about who you are — not just sites you visit like Facebook and controversial firms like Cambridge Analytica.

You can make some guesses as to where this data comes from especially the more granular consumer data from Oracle. For each "Educated consumers," they said, "are better equipped to be data point, it's worth considering: Who'd be in a position to sell a list of what TV shows I watch, or, at least, a list of what TV shows people demographically like me watch? Who'd be in a position to sell a list of what groceries I, or people similar to me in my area, buy? Some of those companies — companies who you're likely paying, and for whom the internet adage that "if you're not paying, you're the product" doesn't hold — are likely selling data about you without your knowledge. Other data points, like the location data used by Cuebiq, can come from any number of apps or websites, so it may be difficult to figure out exactly which one has passed it on.

> Companies like Google and Facebook often say that they'll let you "correct" the data that they hold on you — tacitly acknowledgingly that they sometimes get it wrong. But if receiving relevant ads is not important to you, they'll let you opt-out entirely — or, presumably, "correct" your data to something false.

> An upcoming European Union rule called the General Data Protection Regulation portends a dramatic change to how data is collected and used on the web — if only for Europeans. No such law seems likely to be passed in the U.S. in the near future.

PROBATE

NOTICE OF PETITION TO

ADMINISTER ESTATE OF VIRGINIA ALBERTA MOORE aka VIRGINIA A. MOORE Case No. 18STPB03862

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors, and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of VIRGINIA ALBERTA MOORE aka VIRGINIA A. MOORE A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by John M. Jones in the Superior Court of California, County of LOS ANGELES. THE PETITION FOR PROBATE requests that John M. Jones be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

the decedent.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on May 30, 2018 at 8:30 AM in Dept. No. 29 located at 111 N. Hill St., Los Angeles,

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.
YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the

By William Odis Martin Contributor

NORWALK – Miguel Rivera could have easily died the night of August 15, 2009, but there was too much life left to live, too much work to be done, and hope to be spread, for him to take the easy

Miguel was only 18 years old, just graduated Norwalk High School and just a few days away from beginning his next chapter at UC Santa Barbara when he became a C6 quadriplegic.

Miguel had everything going for him before that fateful Friday night. He was popular, athletic, and had good grades, but one inebriated decision nearly took that all away in an instant.

Miguel made the life altering decision to get behind the wheel while intoxicated and wound up driving off the 605 freeway. His car flipped and crashed into a ditch separating the north and southbound freeways near the Firestone exit.

Luckily no one else was seriously injured, but Miguel remembers being told by doctors that he would never walk again.

He could have easily gave up hope in the hospital as his new reality started to sink in. The simple tasks of bathing himself, getting in and out bed, going to the restroom were suddenly not easy for him anymore.

for the former high school of redemption. quarterback who had it all.

"There were two or three years strengthened me as a person, in touch with the cause.

alive, really," explains Miguel.

He was used to being social and active, but his injuries tarnished his spirit and left him immobile and alone.

Miguel credits the love of his family, the team of Paralysis Specialists at A Perfect Step, and the uplifting words of a neighbor, comedian Eric Blake, that inspired him to turn his curse into a blessing by reframing his state of mind.

"When I started going to my rehab and seeing the community of people with similar injuries all working towards recovery I began to feel empowered. Slowly, I started feeling my confident and I wasn't ashamed to be seen," explains Miguel. "I wanted to do as much as I could do, however I could do it."

He realized he was going to have to work, just like everybody else. Wake up and grind every day out just like the rest of us.

He understood his new circumstances and obstacles.

There was no time to feel sorry for himself. Now he would have to work a little harder, a little different, but with greater purpose.

Miquel began taking his physical therapy more seriously youth. and enrolled in Cerritos College in hopes of picking up where he

> With his renewed will to live, he felt anything was possible, Miguel eventually transferred to Cal State Dominguez Hills before graduating with high honors.

Miguel launched a nonprofit organization called The Dream Big Project, intended to bring hope and unity back into the community of Norwalk and its surrounding

"We want to change the culture. We want to normalize positive growth in the community, says Miguel.

Last week, Miguel was invited to share his story with the students at John Glenn High School in Norwalk in efforts to bring awareness to the legitimate dangers of drinking and driving, but most importantly, to remind the future to never give up and to always dream big.

The organization has raised thousands of dollars through fundraisers and private donations. Miguel and his organization has given hundreds of school supplies, including backpacks, to Norwalk's underserved and underprivileged

On July 27 the organization will be hosting its first annual scholarship awards ceremony Soon he found himself more at the Norwalk Arts & Sports Complex.

Can I buy a house with bad credit?

If you have bad credit and fear you'll face a loan such as paying down your debts, paying your bills denial when applying for a mortgage, don't worry. You may still be able to get a mortgage with a low credit score. Of course it will depend on a few factors, so your best bet to see if you'll qualify for a loan is to talk to a lender. Many lenders will have a conversation with you about your eligibility with no obligation to apply for a loan.

First, let's take a look at the credit score ranges from FICO:

Exceptional credit = 800 and above Very good credit = 740 to 800 Good credit =670 to 740 Fair credit = 580 to 670Poor credit = under 580

Even if you have low credit, there are still options for buying a home. Among other qualification requirements, mortgages will have credit score requirements. The minimum credit score you'll need depends on the loan type. For example, the minimum require score for conventional loans is 620. But the FHA loan program allows for credit scores of 580. So if low credit continues to dog you, an FHA loan might be your best bet. But remember, lenders may also have different requirements based on other factors such as your down payment amount or income.

Another option that prospective homeowners with bad credit can take is purchasing a home with a coborrower

Having bad credit is not the end of the world. It still may be possible for lenders to give you a loan, provided your credit score is not too low. But be aware that you may pay a higher interest rate and more fees since you are more likely to default (fail to pay the loan back). So it's in your best interest to improve your credit score in order to get a lower interest rate, which can save you thousands in the long run.

Mortgage lenders look at the "age," dollar amount, and payment history of your different credit lines. That means opening accounts frequently, running up your balances, and paying on time or not at all can impact your credit score negatively. Just changing one of these components of your spending behavior can positively affect your credit score.

There are ways you can improve your credit score, on time, and disputing possible errors on your credit report. But on the flip side, there are ways you can also hurt your score, so remember:

DON'T close an account to remove it from your report (it doesn't work).

DON'T open too many credit accounts in a short period of time.

DON'T take too long to shop around for interest rates. Lenders must pull your credit report every time you apply for credit. If you are shopping around with different lenders for a lower interest rate, there is generally a grace period of about 30 days before your score is affected.

Even if you have reversed the downward spiral of your credit history, you might need to tell a prospective lender that there may be some signs of bad credit in your report. This will save you time, since he or she will look at different loans than he

If you are still having trouble getting a loan, ask your lender why. Bad credit is just one of many reasons you may be denied a loan. Other reasons you may be denied a home loan include:

Overextended credit cards: If you miss payments or exceed your limit, that's a red flag to lenders.

Failure to pay a previous or existing loan: If you have defaulted on other loans, a lender will think Bankruptcy: Filed for bankruptcy in the past seven years? You might have trouble getting a loan.

Overdue taxes: Lenders check your tax payment

Legal judgments: If you have a judgment against you for such things as delinquent child support payments, it could harm your credit.

Collection agencies: Lenders will know if collection agencies are after you.

Overreaching: You might be seeking a loan outside what you can reasonably afford.

Before choosing an agent, get pre-approved shoppers, you likely want to do to securing an agent or highly anything possible to make sure you get the home you want especially if you're in a competitive market. There are plenty of tips to follow, but one many prospective buyers overlook is getting preapproved before talking to a real estate agent.

Getting pre-approved won't just help increase your chances of winning the home or make the process easier for you as you go through the home buying journey, but if you plan on involving an agent they will almost certainly require that you get pre-approved before they even start showing you homes. It's often the first step an agent will ask you to take if you are serious about buying. If you've already done it before you pick up the phone to call the agent, you're one step ahead of the game.

According to the Zillow Group Consumer Housing Trends Report 2017, 92 percent of buyers who finance their home with a mortgage get pre-approved first. Buyers who use an agent are more likely to obtain pre-approval than

If you're like many home approval is either a prerequisite approved] and all of a sudden you recommended by their agent.

> Getting pre-approved early serves many purposes, but one particularly important aspect is that it helps you understand how you're looking to buy in, being much you can actually afford as you begin your home search.

"What you see online and what you see in open houses might be great but what if that doesn't match up with what you can afford?" said Brendon Densmore, a real estate expert. "You want to iron everything out in advance. You want to make sure you have your financial ducks in a row and the best way to do that is through the preapproval process."

This process can also let you know if you have any issues with your credit, as a lender will pull your credit report, check your finances and verify your income and assets.

"You have to make sure there are no issues with your credit. There may be something on your credit report you don't know about and these things can affect your those who don't work with an score and therefore, your ability agent (83 percent, compared with to get a mortgage," Densmore 67 percent), indicating that pre-said. "If you don't do it [get pre-get into the process and want to make an offer on a house and you find out you can't, you just waste your time and your brokers time."

Depending on which market pre-approved can mean winning the house or not even being considered. In some particularly "hot" markets, homes can receive multiple offers and without having a pre-approval letter to go along with your offer, it's going to be much harder to be competitive.

Need an Answer? Dale Jervis Doing Thirds Better

Ask a Question!

Then you're buying or selling a home—or even if you're just thinking about making a move -you naturally have a lot of questions. It's also natural that you would like to find an easy way to get the answers to those questions. Unfortunately, many people don't have any idea where to turn to get the real estate answers they need. They may not know any of the agents in their area and, even if they do, they may be reluctant to contact them because they're afraid of bothering someone with their question. Or worse, they fear they may be trapped into a high-pressure sales situation.

That's why Dale Jervis established his Real Estate Resource Web Site as a clearinghouse for information about buying or selling. Now he has taken this important service a step further. Through his innovative electronic forum, anyone who has a question about buying or selling a home can simply access his Web site and send their questions to him directly via e-mail just by clicking a button. Because his Web site is online hours a day, buyers and sellers can type in their questions right when they think of them rather than having to wait until it's convenient to call. Then they can rest assured, knowing that Dale will get back to them with the answers they need. Of course, there's no obligation. It's just another community service Dale offers to make real estate easier for everyone-whether or not they're his clients.

The answers you need right when you need them. That's what you expect from your real estate professional. That's what you get from Dale Jervis. Visit www.DaleJervis. com. Call or text Dale at (562) 743-2121. You'll be glad you did.
